PREFACE

This volume has been prepared primarily for the use of college Freshmen. On the side of grammar I have tried to provide in the notes for the understanding of unusual constructions, and for a somewhat systematic study of certain matters which, while entirely regular, require more observation and reflection than can be counted upon before the first year in college. I have laid especial emphasis upon the force of the tenses. The feeling for the finer distinctions of the Greek tenses is more difficult of attainment than the understanding of the moods, and these distinctions often baffle translation. The force of the particles is another difficulty that can be met only by constant observation and comparison in reading. In many instances I have given in a single note a systematic review of the uses of a given particle, and have then attempted by repeated references to this note to provide for frequent review and discrimination. I have treated many of the uses of prepositions in the same way.

Rhetorical matters have received especial attention. In Lysias we have the first really successful application of rhetorical theory to practical speech. The more vehement and showy style of Demosthenes, imitated by Cicero, and through him passed on to the modern world, long dominated English oratory. But in our own time, with the marked tendency toward simplicity and directness in public speech, we are ready for a new appreciation of Lysias, and for the study of his style as a most valuable training in the art of combining simplicity with distinction in prose composition. I have added to the Introduction to each speech a chapter on its Argument and Style, designed to be studied section by section as the reading advances.

I have attempted to bring all of the matter in the notes within the ready understanding of the young students for whom the volume is designed. Nothing can be more valuable to advanced students than constant reference to other Greek authors and to the standard modern authorities, but to fill notes for young students with such matters is only to discourage them in the attempt to use the notes at all.

The notes have been prepared upon the assumption that either the twelfth or the sixteenth speech will be the first to be read.

In the preparation of this volume I have made constant use of the stores of material in the great edition of Frohberger-Gebauer and the hardly less valuable edition of Rauchenstein-Fuhr. Thalheim’s critical edition of 1901 has made the task of establishing and commenting on the text much simpler than that of my predecessors. For the treatment of Lysias’s Ethopoiaia I have depended especially on the studies of the late Ivo Bruns, whose brilliant work, Das Literarische Porträt der Griechen, has made all students of Greek literature his debtors. And in all departments of my work I have turned constantly to the Attische Beredsamkeit of Friedrich Blass, the man who more than all others in our time has broadened the foundations for the study of Greek oratory.

I am indebted to Professor Herbert Weir Smyth for valuable suggestions and criticisms, and to my colleague, Professor Richard Wellington Husband, who has read nearly all of the volume in proof, and whose criticism has been of constant service.

INTRODUCTION

THE LIFE OF LYSIAS

[Dionysius begins his essay on Lysias with a brief biography. We have a critical edition of this essay in Usener-Radermacher, Dionysii Halicarnasei Opuscula, Lips. 1899. We have also a biography in the Lives of the Ten Orators, handed down to us under the false ascription to Plutarch; the unknown author is cited as Pseudo-Plutarch. A critical edition of this text, together with that of Dionysius's essay, is contained in Thalheim's text edition of Lysias.

A brief life of Lysias is appended to the discussion of his works in Photius, Bibl. 262, but it offers nothing that is not found in Pseudo-Plutarch.

Suidas, s.v. Λυσίας, gives a very condensed life, but adds nothing to the statements of Dionysius.

Harpocration refers to a speech of Lysias Περὶ τῶν ἴδιων ἑπεργεσίῶν (s.vv. Κεῖοι, μεταπόργιον, Ψηγαίεδος). From this speech On his Services, lost to us, the biographers probably obtained some of their facts about his life.]

LYSIAS was the son of Cephalus, a Syracusan who had settled at the Piraeus by invitation of Pericles. The family was prosperous and honored, but by the Athenian constitution neither Cephalus nor his sons could become Athenian citizens except by special act of the Ecclesia. They probably did receive the rank of privilegedetics (ἰσοτέλεῖς) by which they were freed from the small, but humiliating, tax on foreigners, and from the requirement that they be enrolled as under the formal protection of an Athenian patron (προστάτης). They came under the same military and financial obligations to the state as though they had been citizens, and we have Lysias's testimony to the fact that these duties were fully performed (12.

1 Lys. 12. 4; Plato, Republic, 328 b.
They also received the privilege — not always granted even to ἵσορελεῖς — of holding real estate.\(^1\)

That Cephalus’s home was one of refinement and a gathering place of the most cultured men of the time is evident from the fact that Plato chooses it as the scene of his great dialogue, the Republic.\(^2\) Plato draws a charming picture of the aged man, sitting in the center of an eager circle, talking with Socrates about the infirmities and the compensating pleasures of old age. He says that he has the comfort of knowing that the ample fortune which had come down from his grandfather, Cephalus, and his father, Lysanias, will pass on undiminished to his sons. He admits that wealth is a comfort to old age, but insists that without a calm and happy spirit wealth would be worthless to an old man. Of the advantages that wealth gives he holds the greatest to be that it enables a man to fulfill all his obligations to gods and men, and so to face the unknown world beyond death with the good hope of which Pindar sings.\(^3\)

The boy Lysias, brought up in such a home, had every advantage of contact with the leaders in the literary life of the city, and education with the sons of the best families.\(^4\) But at the age of fifteen he set forth with his older brother, Polemarchus,\(^5\) for the new colonial city Thurii, in southern Italy.

1 We have explicit testimony to the fact that Lysias was ἵσορελής (Ps.-Plut. 836 A), and the fact that the family owned real estate in Attica (12. 18) implies the same status for the others. (Inscriptions seldom show ἠγκτῆσις γῆς καὶ οἰκίας except as added to a grant of ἱσορέλεια or προξενία.)

2 Plato does not take pains to secure exact chronological accuracy in the setting of the dialogue. If he thought of it as held before the departure of Polemarchus for Thurii, Lysias and Euthydemus would hardly have been of an age to warrant their mention with the company gathered; but if we place the dialogue after Polemarchus’s return from Thurii, as is now commonly done, we must probably assume that Plato forgets or ignores the fact that at this time Cephalus had been dead several years.

3 Plato, Republic, 328–332.

4 Dionys. Lysias, § 1; Ps.-Plut. 835 C.

5 Pseudo-Plutarch (835 D) says that Lysias had three brothers, Pole-
Here, near the site of old Sybaris, a new city was rising, to which men prominent in every profession were flocking from all Greece. Athens took the lead in founding the colony, but she treated it as a pan-Hellenic enterprise, and settlers were welcomed from every city. Hippodamus of Miletus, the greatest architect of the day, laid out the plan of the orderly streets; Protagoras of Abdera, the greatest of the sophists, the poet-philosopher Empedocles of Agrigentum, Tisias of Syracuse, chief expounder of the new Sicilian art of Rhetoric, Herodotus the historian, Cleandridas the Spartan statesman, were among the famous men who joined in founding the new city.

It is possible that Lysias and his brother were among the first colonists, in 443 B.C., but it is more likely that they went much later, about the beginning of the Peloponnesian War.

Dionys. (§ 1) says that two brothers went with him to Thurii, but according to Ps.-Plut. he went σὺν τῷ πρεσβυτάτῳ ἀδελφῷ Πολεμάρχῳ (835 D). In the opening of the Republic (328 B) Plato says, ἵμεν οὖν οἶκα καὶ σπῆλεα τόν Πολεμάρχον, καὶ Διόνυσίουν τε αὐτόθι καταλάβομεν καὶ Εὐθύδημον, τοὺς τοῦ Πολεμάρχου ἀδελφοὺς. Brachyllus was probably the husband of Lysias's sister (Blass, Attische Beredsamkeit, I.3 346).

1 On the date of the colonization of Thurii see Busolt, Griechische Geschichte, III. 1. 523.

2 The question of the date of the removal to Thurii is bound up with the unsettled question of the year of Lysias's birth. The data for the year of birth are the following statements:

RELIABLE STATEMENTS

a. Cephalus settled in Athens by persuasion of Pericles; Lys. 12. 4.
b. Cephalus lived at Athens thirty years; Lys. 12. 4.

d. Lysias was considerably older than Isocrates, who was born 436 B.C.; Plato, Phaedrus, 228 A, 279 A.

c. Lysias removed to Thurii at the age of fifteen; Dionys. § 1; Ps.-Plut. 835 D.
Here Polemarchus received the citizenship that had been beyond his reach at Athens, and Lysias too became a citizen in

Statements of Doubtful Value

\[ g. \] Lysias was born in the archonship of Philocles (459/8); Ps.-Plut. 835 C. But this date would easily be the result of a computation of one who did not know the birth year, but assumed the removal to Thurii to have been in 444/3 \((444/3 + 15 = 459/8)\).

\[ h. \] Lysias went to Thurii when the colony was founded; Dionys. § 1; Ps.-Plut. 835 D. But any one who did not know the date of the removal would naturally assume this.

\[ i. \] Lysias was forty-seven years old when he returned to Athens; Dionys. § 1. But this may be only a reckoning of the number of years between the computed date 459/8 and 412/11. That it was so obtained is probable from Dionysius’s qualifying words, οὔτε ἰστί εἰκάσεως.

\[ j. \] Cephalus died before Lysias went to Thurii; Ps.-Plut. 835 D. But by Pseudo-Plutarch’s own statement that the removal was in 444/3 the coming of Cephalus to Athens is thus carried back before 474/3, a date too early for the influence of Pericles. The death of Cephalus before Lysias’s removal would be a natural assumption to account for the migration of so young a boy.

The traditional date, 459/8, based on \( g \), is consistent with the data as given above, but it forces us to the conclusion that Lysias’s extraordinary professional activity fell between the years of fifty-five and seventy-eight. The improbability of so productive an old age, occupied with a profession taken up so late in life, has led many scholars to reject the date 459/8 and to seek other points of reckoning.

If we try to bring the birth year down to a later date, we must stop well before 436/5, the birth year of Isocrates \( (d) \). If we assume 446 as the approximate date, we have the coming of Cephalus \( (a, c) \) at a time when Pericles’s influence was fully established, the removal to Thurii at about the beginning of the Peloponnesian War \( (= 446 - 15) \), and the death of Cephalus before 416 \( (= 446 - 30) \). This would bring the beginning of Lysias’s professional work into the prime of his life.

By bringing the birth year down to 444, as is oftener done, we bring the possible date of Cephalus’s death down to about 414, a time that allows the possibility of his having been seen by the boy Plato \( (b. 427) \). But the boy’s knowledge of the old gentleman could hardly account for the beautiful due time. The brothers prospered and acquired property.\textsuperscript{1} We may safely conjecture that they were engaged in manufacture, as they were later at the Piraeus.

But the intellectual advantages open to the brothers in the new colony were no less attractive than their opportunities in politics and business. Polemarchus was committed to the study of Philosophy,\textsuperscript{2} but Lysias turned to the new art of Rhetoric.

In his school years at Athens his training had been in poetry only, the great epics and lyrics. He had doubtless heard, too, some of the works of the great dramatists; but prose literature was still in its infancy. He might have read some of the work of the Ionian chroniclers, the undeveloped beginnings of historical writing, and he may well have heard, shortly before his departure for Thurii, some of the earliest work of Herodotus from his own lips. He had heard powerful speeches, — probably he had heard Pericles himself, — but at this time public men had no thought of publishing their speeches; speech writing was only just coming to be regarded as a literary art, and the new art had not yet passed from the first theorists to the speakers in courts and ecclesia.

But at Thurii Lysias found himself in the midst of a new and vigorous literary movement, centering in the teaching of Tisias, the Syracusan rhetorician.

Corax of Syracuse had been the first to treat speech writing as an object of systematic study. We have only vague accounts of his work, but we know that, out of the mass of litigation that had come from revolutions and counter-revolutions in the Sicilian cities, the practice of the law courts had developed more rapidly than in the rest of Hellas, and that Corax description in the \textit{Republic}. It is more likely that Plato wrote of what he had learned from others.

For the detailed discussion of the whole question and the views of modern scholars, see Blass, \textit{Attische Beredsamkeit}, I.\textsuperscript{2} 339 ff.

had formulated certain principles of pleading. His greatest service was his study of the art of argument from "probabilities," an art which would enable one to plead upon scanty evidence, or even against overwhelming evidence of his opponent. He had made some progress, too, toward a theory of the effective disposition of matter in a speech—at least he had developed a theory of the structure of the proem. Tisias, his pupil, succeeded to the master's place, and reduced his teachings to a system, embodying them in a formal treatise (Τέχνη).

Tisias, then, the young Lysias found at Thurii, and under his instruction he entered upon the study of the art of argumentation and speech writing (Ps.-Plut. 835 D).

But these studies were doubtless furthered by the influence of another great teacher, the greatest of the sophists, Protagoras. He had come to Thurii with the first colonists, and at least from pupils of his, Lysias would receive training no less valuable than that of Tisias. Protagoras did not aim so much at the production of a formal speech, but he professed to enable his pupils to conquer their opponents in any disputation, and this by his famous art of making the weaker the stronger argument, τῶν ἵπτω λόγων κρείττῳ ποιεῖν. The whole art of dialectic and eristic was his, and he professed to be able to corner the professor of any science on his own ground, without himself knowing the facts of the science on which he was disputing. This brilliant training in argumentation fitted exactly into Tisias's more limited teaching. It was, moreover, accompanied by other teaching which was lacking in Tisias's course, the systematic study of language. Grammar and vocabulary received careful treatment at the hands of Protagoras, so that his pupils were trained not only in the invention of argument, but in its correct expression.

Lysias came under these influences just as he was passing from boyhood to manhood, the age when he was best fitted to profit by the instruction which his abundant means and leisure opened to him. He devoted himself to the study of prose composition in the form of speech writing, not at all as a means of livelihood, but purely as a literary accomplishment.

The prosperous life of the brothers at Thurii continued about twenty years; but in 413 came the terrible disaster to the Athenian army before Syracuse, and the complete triumph of the anti-Athenian party in Sicily. One result was the expulsion from Thurii of some three hundred Athenian sympathizers, Polemarchus and Lysias being among the number. The brothers naturally returned to their former home at Athens, where their mother was still living, and where their father had left a large property. Here, at the Piraeus, the brothers conducted a shield manufactory operated by more than a hundred slaves (12. 19). Lysias, and perhaps Polemarchus, lived at the Piraeus.

On his return to the Piraeus Lysias had found the Four Hundred in power. They were supported at the first by the more intelligent and wealthy citizens, the class with whom Lysias’s social and intellectual connections would be most intimate. But as metics Lysias and Polemarchus could have no direct share in the stirring political movements of the summer of 411, which ended with the triumph of the conservative aristocracy. The next year saw the restoration of the radical democracy, and then followed the tremendous exertions of the exhausted state in its determined effort to ward off the inevitable result of the long-protracted war. In the great financial sacrifices demanded in these last years of the war, Lysias and his brother bore their full share. But they had inherited sufficient property, their business was prosperous, and they came to the close of the war with better fortunes than did many of their associates.

The life of Lysias during these seven years was by no means that of a manufacturer hard pressed by the daily cares of his business. The men of his class knew little of the slavery that comes with the pressure of modern business methods. While he operated a successful factory, the larger interests of his life were intellectual. His own study of rhetoric in the years at Thurii enabled him now, in the prime of life, to take his place at once among the most prominent writers at Athens. And in no department of literature would excellence find quicker recognition at just this time than in rhetoric. For during the years of Lysias's absence in Italy the same development of prose writing that had been going on at Thurii had advanced even more rapidly at Athens.

Even before the Peloponnesian War Protagoras had given his pupils at Athens the same training in language and in the art of disputation which he gave at Thurii, and the lesser sophists had worked effectively along the same lines, to train skilled debaters and to teach the art of polished expression. But in the distinctive art of rhetoric two men, greater than any of Lysias's teachers, had been doing brilliant work at Athens, Thrasymachus of Chalcedon and Gorgias of Leontini.1 Into the circle of their pupils Lysias now came.

Thrasymachus was one of the sophists and rhetoricians who went from city to city offering instruction in the new learning. He was already well known at Athens about the beginning of the Peloponnesian War2 and became one of the great rhetorical teachers there, the most influential in the ultimate development of prose writing.3 We have only a sin-

1 It is entirely possible that Lysias had heard both Thrasymachus and Gorgias at Thurii; but the biographers name neither as his teacher.
2 Aristophanes has his fling at him in 427 B.C., Frag. 198. 7.
3 For a detailed study of Thrasymachus and his permanent influence on gle fragment of his writing,¹ but from statements of ancient critics we learn that he developed a clear and pure style of speech, avoiding, on the one hand, the artificial stiffness of other rhetoricians, and, on the other, the undignified speech of the untrained man; that he was probably the first to perfect the rounded, periodic sentence, gathering the separate thoughts into one compact whole; and that he added to this periodic structure the beauty of a fitting prose rhythm. Thrasymachus also taught his pupils the effectiveness of the appeal to the feelings, in distinction from the appeal to the reason only. The art of disputation as taught by the other rhetoricians awakened the admiration of the hearers, but it did not move them; Thrasymachus taught how to reach the will through the feelings. All of this work was sound, and it laid a permanent foundation for that dignified, forcible, noble Attic style which his pupil Isocrates later brought to perfection.

But during the same period, from 427 on, another, more popular, teacher of Rhetoric was coming from time to time to Athens, Gorgias of Leontini, an exponent of the Sicilian rhetoric, with its elaborate arguments from probability, but still more prominently the exponent of a new method of expression. Gorgias’s invention was that of a new form of composition, intermediate between poetry and prose. Poetry had the beauty of the grouping of words in symmetrical verses determined by meter; Gorgias developed a form of prose in which short clauses of almost or quite equal length were ranged in pairs, each pair marked by an antithesis of thought, and often by rhyme of the final syllables. Poetry had also the beauty of a vocabulary of its own, raised above the common speech, and enriched by the free word formations of the poet; Gorgias transferred this rich vocabulary to his prose. To compensate for the loss of the rhythm of poetry, he pleased the ear with constant assonance of syllables, and with every sort of play on the sounds of words.

The young Athenians were carried away by this novel style of composition. They flocked to his lectures and vied with one another in imitating his prettily balanced antitheses and his cunning play of sounds. No writer of the time entirely escaped his influence. It formed an irresistible current setting toward all that was artificial in speech.

Yet a third man had been molding Attic prose style in these same years, Antiphon, an Athenian by birth. Under the influence of the earlier Sicilian teachers, Antiphon took up the study and teaching of rhetoric, and that in the most practical form. His work, like that of Thrasymachus and Gorgias, commenced about the beginning of the Peloponnesian War. He published a systematic treatise on rhetoric (Texýryj), and a series of model speeches to illustrate methods of handling both sides of typical cases at law. But Antiphon was more than a theorist; he was an active politician,—the real intellectual force back of the oligarchy of the Four Hundred,—and he wrote speeches for litigants to deliver in actual cases in the courts. He further treated these speeches not simply as pleas to accomplish their immediate purpose in the court room, but as literary masterpieces, to be published and circulated afterward.¹

In style Antiphon was neither poetic like Gorgias, nor clear and noble like Thrasymachus, but he had a dignity of expression which, with his strength in argument, gave him a commanding position. His mature work represents the earlier, strong type of Athenian speech of the Periclean time, modified, but not controlled, by the refinements of Thrasymachus and Gorgias.²

Now when Lysias returned to Athens in 411 he found the influence of these three men at its height. All had published treatises on the theory of rhetoric, and speeches by all were in circulation among students of oratory. The most mature work of each of the three falls near this date. Lysias found also a body of men of his own age and younger, trained under these teachers, enthusiasts in the art of speech writing. Many men had taken up the work as a money-earning profession, and were prospering as speech writers (λογογράφοι) for the political assemblies and the courts. But they were looked upon only as tradesmen, and hardly had access to the inner circle of the gentlemen who were cultivating the new art for art's sake. Into this inner circle Lysias came, and was soon recognized as its ablest representative.

² Drerup, pp. 293, 296, 350.

Of his work in this period we obtain invaluable knowledge through the Phaedrus of Plato, his younger contemporary. Plato represents Socrates as meeting his young friend Phaedrus all aglow from the hearing of a wonderful discourse of Lysias at the house of a friend. Upon Socrates's request that Phaedrus recite the speech to him, Phaedrus replies, "Do you suppose that I, a layman in the art, could give the speech from memory in a way that would be worthy of Lysias, the ablest writer of the day, a composition on which he has worked long and at his leisure? I would give much if I could!" After some byplay of insistence and refusal Socrates discovers that Phaedrus has Lysias's manuscript hidden under his cloak. So, seated under a plane-tree, Phaedrus proceeds to read aloud Lysias's discourse on Love. At the close of the reading Socrates finds his young friend in a fine frenzy, carried away by the charm of the language. After a bit of mock sympathy with his ravings, Socrates turns to a sharp criticism of the speech, both as to form and content.1

We may think of Lysias, then, in these last years of the Peloponnesian War, as occupying his abundant leisure with the composition of speeches and essays designed to be read to a circle of his private friends, and perhaps to be published. It is not likely,

1 Whether the discourse of Lysias in the Phaedrus was a part of a published speech which Plato incorporated in his dialogue as a subject for criticism, or only a discourse written by Plato in the manner of Lysias, has been much disputed. The prevailing opinion now is that it is the work of Lysias himself. So Jebb, Attic Orators, I. 305 ff.; Blass, o.c. p. 424 ff.
though it is possible, that he was already beginning to give courses of lectures on rhetoric. His written discourses were ranked with the best work of Thrasymachus and Gorgias.

But the prosperity of these years after the return from Thurii was suddenly interrupted. The disastrous close of the war was followed by the political revolution which put the Thirty into complete control of the city, while this body itself soon fell under the domination of a reckless and desperate faction headed by the returned exile Critias. The Thirty found themselves with an empty treasury, with no subject states to furnish tribute as of old, with their own citizens terribly impoverished by the twenty-seven years’ war; and they had to meet, not only the ordinary expenses of the state, but the expense of the employment of a standing Spartan garrison. They could not safely put heavy financial burdens upon those of their own citizens who had still some property remaining, for it was upon the good-will of these richer citizens that the administration had to depend for moral support. The obvious resort was the seizure of the property of the wealthy metics, who formed a large class of the men engaged in business and manufacture.

False charges against a group of these metics were formulated and their condemnation pushed through the Senate, without warning or opportunity of defense for the accused. Among the victims of this lawless attack were the brothers Polemarchus and Lysias. In his twelfth speech Lysias gives the detailed account of their arrest, the seizure of their property, the execution of his brother, and his own narrow escape and flight to Megara.

When the democratic exiles who had been banished by the Thirty gathered on the frontier and moved down upon Piraeus, establishing themselves in camp at Munychia, Lysias joined them and became an active helper in the Return.\(^1\) After the restoration of the democracy Thrasybulus, the

\(^1\) 12. 53 implies that Lysias was with the exiles at Piraeus. Ps.-Plutarch (835 F) says that he furnished 2000 drachmas and 200 shields; that he hired great leader of the Return, carried a motion in the Ecclesia\(^1\) that citizenship be granted to all who had joined in the return of the democrats.\(^2\) This would have given to Lysias the full rights of a citizen, but the decree was attacked as illegal by Archinus, another of the democratic leaders, and was defeated in the courts (see XXXIV, Introd.).\(^3\)

Immediately after the restoration of the democracy Lysias came before the courts in the prosecution of Eratosthenes, the member of the Thirty who had arrested his brother, Polemar- chus. To this prosecution Lysias brought the perfected skill in argument and arrangement of matter and the facility in expression which he had been acquiring in his years of rhetorical training. This prosecution, while probably not successful in securing the condemnation of Eratosthenes, brought Lysias prominently before the public, and opened the way for him to enter at once upon a career as a \(\lambda\omicron\gamma\omicron\omicron\omicron\gamma\acute{r}\acute{a}\phi\omicron\upsilon\), or professional writer of 300 mercenaries (presumably Ps.-Plutarch means at his own expense), and secured a gift of two talents for the cause from Thrasyaeus, an Elean friend. If these statements are true, Lysias must have saved something from the wreck of his property. The statements may have come from Lysias’s speech “On his Services.”

Resp. Ath. 40. 2.

\(^3\) The account of the biographers rests upon a misunderstanding of this motion of Thrasybulus. Pseudo-Plutarch says (835 F) that Thrasybulus moved that citizenship be given to Lysias, that it was so voted by the people, but that their action was annulled by the courts as illegal, not being based on a recommendation of the Senate (cp. Phot. 4. 172 C; Schol. Aesch. 3. 195; Schol. Hermog., Walz V. 343). The tradition has evidently represented as a special proposition in the case of Lysias what was really a proposition for all who had shared in the Return. The effect of a \(\gamma\alpha\rho\acute{a}\phi\eta\ \pi\alpha\rho\acute{a}\i\omicron\acute{t}\omicron\acute{m}\omicron\upsilon\) was to suspend any decree against which it was brought, pending the decision of the courts (Meier u. Schömann, Der attische Process, p. 435). Archinus probably brought his action immediately upon the passage of the decree, so that we can hardly suppose that Lysias enjoyed even a few weeks of citizenship.
speeches for others to deliver in the courts or political assemblies. What had before been the occupation of scholarly leisure now became the means of restoring his fortunes.

With remarkable literary insight Lysias was able to turn from the artificial style which he, like all rhetoricians of the time, had cultivated for purposes of display, and to perfect a type of plain, practical speech, which soon placed him at the head of his profession.

It was probably at this time that he also began the work of formal teaching. We have Aristotle's testimony ¹ that Lysias at first taught rhetoric, but that finding in Theodorus of Byzantium a rival who was his superior in rhetorical theory, he turned to the work of a λογογράφος.²

Another rival also soon appeared in the person of his younger contemporary, Isocrates, who returned about 400 B.C. from a course of rhetorical training under Gorgias in Thessaly. Isocrates, with his artificial style and his refined elegance of expression, proved no match for Lysias in speech writing for court or ecclesia, and soon abandoned this field, turning to the teaching of rhetoric, and the publication of political pamphlets, cast for the most part in the form of speeches.

Lysias was thus left as the recognized master of practical speech writing. As a metic he was excluded from personal activity in politics, and thus he turned the more toward the one pursuit of writing for others. The fact of the superiority of his rivals in the department of teaching rhetoric tended to the same result. The twenty years after the restoration of the democracy show remarkable activity of Lysias in this professional work. In the first cen-

² It is quite possible (Blass, p: 347, holds it as certain) that his work as a teacher falls in the period before the Thirty, but it seems more probable that this money-earning work began with his work as a paid speech writer after the loss of his property. tury A.D. more than two hundred of his published speeches were in circulation.¹

Only once do we find Lysias coming forward personally in public affairs. In 388 the Corinthian War was still dragging along, indecisive and burdensome to both sides; but rumors were abroad that a coalition was forming on the side of Sparta, between Persia and Dionysius, tyrant of Syracuse. At the Olympic Games of that year a splendidly equipped delegation from Dionysius appeared, and a band of rhapsodists chanted the poems of the tyrant.

Against this glorification of the tyrant of his father's native city Lysias delivered before the assembled Greeks his Olympic oration. The Greeks were urged to give up their ruinous strife with one another, and to join against their common enemies, the tyrants. So effective is the speech said to have been that the crowds rushed upon the gold-bedecked tent of the Syracusans and plundered it.²

Of Lysias's private life after the Return, we know only that his wife was a daughter of his sister, and that he was a lover of the hetaera Metanira, for whom he secured initiation into the Eleusinian Mysteries.³

As we can trace his professional work down to about 380 B.C., we conclude that he died not long after that date.⁴

⁴ We have the statement of Pseudo-Plutarch (836 A) that Lysias died at Athens ὑγδοηκοντα τρία ἐτη βιοὺς, ἤ ὡς τινες ἐκ καὶ ἐβδομηκοντα, ἤ ὡς τινες ὑπὲρ ὑγδοηκοντα, a statement which shows only that the biographers had no reliable knowledge of the date.
INTRODUCTION

THE WORKS OF LYSIAS

Our manuscripts of Lysias\(^1\) have preserved thirty-one speeches, of which twenty-three are now commonly held to be genuine. Parts of three other speeches are preserved in our manuscripts of Dionysius of Halicarnassus,\(^2\) being inserted by him as specimens of Lysias's style. To these is to be added the fragment in Plato's Phaedrus.\(^3\)

The ancient critics made the following classification of speeches:

\begin{align*}
\text{Δίκαιοι, court speeches} & \quad \text{Δημοσίων in public cases.} \\ \text{Προσωπικοί, in private cases.} & \\
\text{Αδίκοι, deliberative speeches in political assemblies.} & \\
\text{Επίδεικτικοί, exhibition speeches, including rhetorical exercises, eulogies, speeches for public festivals, etc.} \end{align*}

Twenty-four of the twenty-six extant speeches fall under the first class, the department in which Lysias especially excelled. Of greatest historical interest is the group of speeches for public cases arising out of the question of reconstruction after the rule of the Thirty — cases which involved the vital question how far the supporters of the oligarchy were to be restored to political influence under the restored democracy.\(^4\) The political questions involved naturally give to these speeches much of the tone and manner of deliberative oratory, and in the most important, the Speech against Eratosthenes (XII), Lysias speaks in his own person.

We have only four speeches written for litigants in private cases: X is for the prosecution in a libel suit; XVII is for a claimant of disputed property; XXIII, a preliminary suit to determine the legal status of an alleged citizen, to clear the way for the prosecution of a private claim; XXXII, a suit of an heir against his guardian, to force the relinquishment of an estate.

Of speeches of the second main division, the deliberative, we have only one, and that probably incomplete (XXXIV). It is a speech written for a citizen who, immediately after the overthrow of the Thirty, opposed a proposition before the Ecclesia to restrict the franchise to owners of real estate.\(^1\)

The third main division is represented in our extant speeches only by the proem of the Olympic Speech.\(^2\)

THE STYLE OFLYSIAS

Lysias stands in the judgment of the Greek and Roman critics as the greatest representative of the Plain Style\(^3\) in prose composition.\(^4\) The Grand Style of Thucydides and the florid, poetic mannerisms of Gorgias stand at one extreme; the simple, straightforward style of Lysias, at the other. Lysias took the plain, direct speech of daily life, purified it of its colloquialisms and vulgarities, and shaped it into a perfect medium for the expression of his thought. His language is the current speech of his own day, neither elevated by occasional words from the vocabulary of the older generation, nor enriched by the diction of the poets, nor made striking by newly formed compounds. Even metaphorical language he seldom used.\(^5\)

1 See XXXIV, Introd.
2 See p. 23.
3 For discussion of the three “Styles,” see App. § 37 ff.
4 Modern criticism of the style of Lysias naturally follows the generally sound observations of Dionysius of Halicarnassus. In his treatise on Lysias he extols his Purity of Language (§ 2), Simplicity of Language (§ 3), Clearness (§ 4), Brevity (§ 5), Compact and Rounded Composition (§ 6), Vividness (§ 7), Ethopoia (§ 8), Adaptedness (§ 9), Persuasiveness (§ 10), and Charm (§ 10 ff.). It must be remembered that Dionysius had a large body of Lysias’s works where we have but a few, and that he had a broader basis for comparison in the possession of many more of the works of his contemporaries than have come down to us.
5 In 24. 14 we have a brief simile, heightened by personification. In 24. 3 \(\lambda\varepsilon\sigma\theta\alpha\) is a simple metaphor. But this speech is throughout in mock-rhetorical style. Other metaphorical expressions are the simple and common ones of
To this simplicity of vocabulary was added a skill in phrase and sentence structure that produced remarkable clearness. In reading Thucydides or Antiphon we are often puzzled to catch the meaning of a sentence, though every indi-gual word may be simple. Lysias seldom perplexes us; he expresses the relations of words as well as the words themselves; phrases follow in the natural order of thought; and the sentences are seldom too long to be carried in the mind as a whole.

And yet this clearness is consistent with brevity both in thought and language. From the union of this simplicity and brevity, together with a fine appreciation of the striking details in a story, comes the vividness of Lysias's narrative style—a department in which he was never surpassed.

But the simplicity of Lysias's composition, even in much of his narrative, is not the monotonous simplicity of the pure "running style." The art of periodic composition had already become the subject of careful study at Athens before Lysias returned from Thurii. While we have no knowledge of Lysias's own theories of the rhetorical "period," we certainly find him to be master of a style that made full use of the compact and rounded form that we properly call periodic, without sacrifice of grace and simplicity.

This effect is due to the brevity and simplicity of his periods, and to the fact that he seldom casts the whole sentence in periodic form. Within the limits of one sentence we often find one, or two, or even more, short periods, but united with other clauses that remain outside the periodic structure. Comparatively few

We find personification in 12. 14 προθυμον δύναμιν; 12. 23 παρανομία; 12. 36 ἀρετὴ; 12. 78 πονηρίας; 32. 23 πονηρίαν.

1 For the full discussion of the running and the periodic styles, see App. § 37 ff.

3 On the ancient and modern use of the term "period" see App. § 52 ff.
sentences are entirely without periodic form, yet in comparatively few does the periodic structure embrace the whole thought. In many sentences again the periodic structure is that of form only, the formal subordination of clauses that are logically coördinate.

The periodic structure in a speech of Lysias is thus seldom obtrusive. We do not often, as in Isocrates regularly, find sentence after sentence shaped in a stiff periodic mold, nor do we often come upon periods so strong and compact that they challenge attention, as they so often do in the speeches of Demosthenes. In Lysias the periodic structure runs through all, giving tone to all, yet usually subordinate to the natural logical flow of the thought.

The periodic language is most marked, as is fitting, in proems and the more earnest appeals, while in narrative it is either of a simplified type or is abandoned altogether.

Yet there is a difference in the periodic composition of the several speeches. Lysias was too good an artist to put into the mouth of the ordinary client a speech that would, by its very phraseology, remind the hearer that the speaker was only claiming a purchased plea. For the plain man he wrote in a plain style that so concealed its art as to seem the natural expression of the man himself. But for the more mature or experienced client, from whose lips the more rhetorical style would not seem unfitting, and especially in cases that dealt with public questions, he sometimes wrote in a manner distinctly more formal, with no little use of the mannerisms of the current rhetoric in the structure of sentence and period.

1 See App. § 50.
2 In this fact we find the explanation of the apparently contradictory statements of Dionysius that Lysias's composition is smooth and simple (συντθηθης γε αυτήν ἄφελως πάνω καὶ ἀπλώς, ὁρῶν ὅτι οὐκ ἐν τῇ περιδῷ καὶ τοῖς ῥυθμοῖς, ἀλλ' ἐν τῇ διαλελυμένῃ λέξει γίνεται τὸ θεός, Lysias § 8), and yet that he is a master of "compact and rounded expression" (ἡ συστρέψουσα τὰ νόμιμα καὶ στρογγύλως ἐκφέρουσα λέξις, § 6).
3 The twenty-fifth speech is a notable example of this. Its style is far removed from that of the sixteenth.
INTRODUCTION

When writing for his own delivery, as in the Speech against Eratosthenes, Lysias was free to follow his own ideal of oratory, and it is in precisely this speech that we find him making largest use of the rhetorical devices of the day.\(^1\) Here we find, especially in proem and epilogue, the frequent use of antithetic and parallel structure of periods, set off by some of the so-called "Gorgian figures" of speech.\(^2\) When, therefore, we speak of Lysias as the representative of the Plain Style of composition it must be with the qualification that this statement applies strictly to his sentence structure in those speeches only where he is writing for the plain man or for the commonplace issue. In other cases, while always far from the grand style, he does show distinctly and repeatedly the artificial traits of the rhetorical style.

Another chief characteristic of Lysias's work is implied in what has just been said. This is his Ethopoia, such adaptation of sentiment, argument, and language to the personality (\(\gamma\theta\oslash\)) of the client, that it seems to the hearers the natural expression of the speaker's own thought. In this Lysias has no rival. And this effect was produced by no mechanical imitation of speech or character.\(^3\) Lysias did not put into the mouth of an uncultured man the ungrammatical or coarse language that he might easily have imitated, nor did he restrict himself to the narrow range of thought which such a client might have had. Both speech and thought are often above the level of the speaker's own powers. And yet they are so nicely fitted to his case, they express so clearly his own feelings, and they so easily carry the hearer along by their apparent candor and simplicity, that we forget the professional writer and think only of the speaker.

This perfection of art could have come only from a rare ability to enter into the feelings of the client, to grasp the essential points of his case, and to see in talking with him what sentiments would seem natural and unaffected as coming from his lips; and then artfully to embody all of this in language in which all art should be concealed.¹ Not every speech offers opportunity for Ethopoia. The prosecutor does not make his own personality prominent, and defendants have more occasion to emphasize their own personality in some cases than in others. It is in cases of defense on δοκιμασία, like those of the sixteenth and twenty-fifth speeches, that Lysias finds his perfect opportunity to embody his client’s personality in his speech.²

Closely allied to Ethopoia is the portraiture of other persons involved in a case. Here Lysias is no less successful. With a few strokes he gives a picture that stands as a permanent character in literature. Such are the portraits of Theramenes in the twelfth speech, of Aristophanes in the nineteenth, of the speaker and his father in the same speech, of the politician in the twenty-fifth, of Diogiton and his daughter in the thirty-second.

To the qualities already discussed Dionysius adds adaptedness, τὸ πρέπον. This is in some measure included in Ethopoia, but it means more than that, for it includes adaptedness of the speech to all the conditions under which it is spoken. We have a good example in the twelfth speech, where there is no occasion for Ethopoia, but where the plea is adapted with great skill to appeal to the two very different factions in the jury.

¹ For the discussion of Ethopoia as shown in individual speeches, see Notes on Argument and Style. For the possible imitation of personal peculiarities of language, see on 19. 15.

INTRODUCTION

Last of all, as the crowning quality of Lysias's style, and a quality so pervasive that it alone would serve to distinguish genuine from spurious speeches of Lysias, Dionysius names a certain indefinable charm, χαρμ. This is only to give a name to the final impression produced by all of the qualities that have been mentioned. It is the result of the combined purity and simplicity and vividness of diction, with the fine adaptation of all to speaker and occasion.

Dionysius admits what all readers must feel, that Lysias is not strong in the appeal to the feelings. He presents his case in a way that secures conviction, but he seldom arouses anger or fear. The pathos of simplicity he does have, through his marvelous power in narrative. But when we think how, in a case like that of the twelfth speech, Demosthenes would have poured out his wrath upon Eratosthenes, and how he would have swept all before his flood of indignation, we feel that even here, where Lysias is most stirred, his language is too cold and calm.

Nor has Lysias the power of Isocrates or Demosthenes to lift the hearer up to high planes of moral or political thought. He makes no attempt to raise a case from the range of small and temporary considerations to that of great principles.

But within these limits Lysias has unexcelled skill in the discovery and invention of arguments. He has the Greek shrewdness in turning a point for or against a man at will. When a rich man has performed large financial services for the state, if he is Lysias's client, the services are a proof of his noble loyalty; but if he is Lysias's opponent, they are a proof of the rapidity with which the fellow has enriched himself from the public funds, and of his shameless effrontery. If influential friends plead for the acquittal of the accused, Lysias urges the jury to be as zealous in punishing the public enemy as these men are in trying to save their personal friend.\(^1\) When Lysias’s client finds that he is the only man to appear as prosecutor on a charge of embezzlement, this becomes a proof of the extent of the defendant’s stealings — that he has been able to buy off all prosecutors save one.\(^2\) If the opponent of Lysias’s client is a rich man, the jury must condemn him to show that no man is rich enough to buy their votes; \(^3\) if the opponent is eloquent, he must be condemned as a warning to the whole class of demagogues, who try to deceive the people by their powers of speech.\(^4\)

Lysias is always resourceful, shrewd in covering his own weak point, and as shrewd in finding or inventing the weakness of his opponent. He has the respectable moderation of his time in refraining from the vulgar invective and outright lying that marred the legal practice of Demosthenes and his contemporaries a generation later, \(^5\) but he does not hesitate to put false construction upon the actions of his opponent, and to play upon unworthy prejudices of the jury. He is, so far as invention of argument is concerned, a typical product of that rhetorical school which prided itself upon “making the weaker, the stronger case.”

In the arrangement of matter and the structure of the framework of his speeches, Lysias is less successful. There is little variation in his plan — a proem to catch the attention and favor of the jury, a brief statement of the case (unless it is already before the jury), often a simple narrative of facts, then detailed arguments followed by a brief and seldom effective epilogue. He has little skill in so arranging his several arguments as to make them converge to one point, or lead up to a climax of conviction or feeling. In the shorter speeches we do not feel this weakness, but in a long plea like the nineteenth it is noticeable; our conviction is stronger at the middle than at the close.

THE REVOLUTIONS OF 411 AND 404 B.C.

The public activity of Lysias began immediately after the overthrow of the Thirty Tyrants. Several of his earliest and most important speeches were written for the prosecution or defense of men who had been engaged in the revolutions of 411 and 404 B.C. The understanding of many of his speeches requires a knowledge of both attempts of the richer and more intelligent classes to set aside the democracy of Pericles, as it had been modified in effect, if not in principle, by his successors, and to establish a conservative form of government, with limited franchise, which should deprive the masses of their political power.

Both of our traditional terms, "The Oligarchy of the Four Hundred" and "The Thirty Tyrants," are misleading. It is true that the administration of the Four Hundred did become a mere oligarchy, and that of the Thirty, outright tyranny; but it was because in each case a small clique of unprincipled men gained control of a movement which originated in an attempt at genuine political reform, and which was at the outset supported by the best intelligence and character of the city.¹

While the immediate occasion of the revolution of 411 was the offer of Alcibiades to rescue the city from its imminent danger, by securing Persian help, upon condition of the disfranchisement of the Demos, yet the real force back of the whole movement was the profound conviction among intelligent and loyal citizens that the existing democracy was a failure.

Athens had been plunged into a terrible war to gratify the personal ambition, as many believed, of the great leader. Since the death of Pericles (in 429) the leadership had been neither energetic nor intelligent, except during brief intervals. When, by the trapping of a Spartan force on the island of Sphacteria (in 425), Sparta was brought to propose peace on terms which would have left Athens in full possession of her own power, and would surely have broken up the Peloponnesian confederacy, Cleon carried the crowd in the assembly against the peace proposals. When, after Cleon's death, the Peace of Nicias had been negotiated by the conservative leader on terms which preserved to Athens a fair equivalent of her former power (in 421), and when Sparta had gone so far as to seek a defensive alliance with her,—a turn of events full of unexpected promise,—peace was again snatched from the state by the masses, carried away by the influence of their latest and most dangerous leader, Alcibiades, with the help of Hyperbolus, Cleon's worthy successor. Then came the great democratic enterprise, the Sicilian expedition, with its dazzling promises and terrible failure, draining the city of men and ships and money. At last, in 412, crippled in resources, depleted in troops, weary of years of fighting, the state was facing dire peril. Against her stood the united Peloponnesians, supported now by Syracuse, and with the promise of Persian gold and ships; her control of the sea was no longer secure; a permanent Lacedaemonian army of occupation at Decelea controlled the outlying Attic districts, and forced the city to maintain a vigilant defense of her own walls; and now the allies, long restive under the arbitrary and shortsighted domination of Athens, were making haste to revolt and to put themselves under the protection of Sparta.

There was never a more imperative call for wise and efficient statesmanship; for an administration which could carry on large military enterprises, handle the finances of a hard-pressed state, conduct the most delicate foreign negotiations, and call out... the hearty support and confidence of all the citizens. The democratic administration was notoriously lacking in all of these qualities. Both Senate and Ecclesia expressed for the most part the changing will of the masses. Only in special emergencies, and not always then, could the better element be rallied with strength enough to overcome the popular vote. The demagogues had been steadily increasing in power since the beginning of the war, and the "sycophants"—politicians turned blackmailers—were on every side threatening the men of property. This new generation of democratic leaders, trained in the popular arts of rhetoric, was the more dangerous by reason of the perfection of its tools. The courts were in the hands of demagogues and sycophants, and their verdict no longer carried moral weight. And all the time the war, long maintained against the protests of the middle and upper classes, was bearing down upon them. Agriculture was destroyed, manufactures crippled by the loss of thousands of slave artisans and by the call for free men of the laboring class for service in the fleet; foreign trade was gone with the closing of the ports of the Athenian league, and the transference of the seat of war to the Aegean. And now heavy direct war taxes began to press upon all who had any considerable property left. The cutting off of the tribute by the revolt of the cities of the league threw the whole cost of the war upon the citizens themselves. To the whole body of the richer citizens financial ruin seemed inevitable.

Another influential class too was ripe for action against the radical democracy. The intellectual leaders, full of the new learning of the sophists, were in the full tide of revolt against the authority of tradition in politics, as in religion; every institution had to meet their challenge and justify itself to their reason. Among these men the incompetence of the Demos was taken for granted, and they were eagerly discussing theories of government and ideal constitutions. Some saw in the Spartan oligarchy the ideal form of government. Yet few had lost faith in the entire democratic idea; most believed that citizenship must be limited, and their watch-word had already become "Return to the constitution of the fathers." To some this meant the constitution of Solon; to others, the moderate democracy of Clisthenes; to all it meant the cutting loose from the domination of the masses.

In this repudiation of the extreme democracy the men of the new culture found themselves in perfect agreement with the very men to whom in religious and literary questions they were most opposed, the representatives of the conservative aristocracy. Thus the anti-democratic idea was fostered by men like Antiphon, now a man of nearly seventy years, the ablest representative of the new profession of the law, and a leading theorist in the new political science; Thucydides, the scholarly representative of the property holding aristocracy; Socrates, the philosopher, and many of his circle; Euripides, the poet of the new culture, and his bitterest critic, Aristophanes, the champion of the "good old" beliefs and customs. The reaction against the existing democracy is prominent in all that is best in the thought of the time.

It was under these conditions, with dissatisfaction with the actual working of democracy pervading all the more intelligent circles, and under the impending ruin of the propertied classes by the continuance of the war, that the proposition came from Alcibiades for a change in the government. The result was the Revolution of 411, which put the Four Hundred into power. The movement was supported by the best and wisest men in the state.

But even in its preliminary stages the revolution betrayed signs of fatal weakness. The honorable and patriotic men among the leaders allowed the hot-headed younger men to take the lead in putting down opposition. More than one democratic opponent was assassinated, and a policy of general terrorism was followed, as the easiest means of clearing the way for the new movement.

The revolutionary government once set up, it was inevitable that the control should fall still more into the hands of the “practical politicians.” The existence of a well-organized system of party clubs enabled their leaders to set aside the representative government that they had promised.

The failure to win the fleet to the support of the new movement threw the aristocratic leaders into grave danger, for there was every reason to fear a successful democratic reaction. The leaders, instead of meeting this danger by carrying out their earlier promises, and so drawing together the whole body of conservative citizens, made the fatal mistake of withdrawing more closely into their own small group, and seeking their personal safety and the support of their government by plans for a treacherous surrender of the city to Sparta.

Their attempt was thwarted only just in time by the prompt action of one of their own party, Theramenes, who organized a revolt against the leaders of the Four Hundred within their own number, and succeeded in bringing into power the real conservative aristocracy, under a limited franchise along the lines at first proposed by the reformers.

But now the fleet under its democratic leaders won a series of brilliant victories on the Hellespont, which so turned the tide of feeling at home that it soon swept away the moderate administration of Theramenes and restored the old democratic constitution. The attempt at a reform of the democracy was at an end, and the Demos, led by Cleophon, a typical demagogue, was again in complete control.

For six years (410–404) the democracy went on as of old, led now by Cleophon, now by Alcibiades,—welcomed back to the city as the idol of the people, only to be repudiated on his first reverse at sea,—then led again by Cleophon and his radicals. All of the abuses of the democracy were once more in full swing. The demagogues attacked the moderate and conservative supporters of the Four Hundred, and inflicted upon them banishment or confiscation of property or disfranchisement; advantageous peace proposals from Sparta were rejected; victorious and patriotic generals were put to death under the hot anger of the populace at the loss of their friends in the storm off the Arginusae (406); and at last the fleet in which had been staked, by one supreme effort, the last resources of the impoverished city was lost at Aegospotami — betrayed by the treachery or the incompetence of its generals. And still the radical democratic leaders refused to talk of peace. It was only when the Peloponnesian fleet under Lysander had closed their harbor, and the land force had moved in upon the suburbs of the city, and when hunger was beginning to press hard upon them, that the conservative element succeeded in making itself heard, and its leader, Theramenes, was entrusted with negotiations for peace.

With the surrender of the city to Sparta the political situation was entirely changed. Whether or not the terms of surrender included the express provision that the democracy be set aside, it was certainly no part of the Spartan programme to leave the Athenian Demos, with its unyielding hatred of Sparta, anything of its old power. It was fully understood between the aristocratic leaders and the Spartans that a new government was to be set up, which should exclude the masses from political power.

When the Spartan Lysander entered the city upon its surrender, he brought with him a body of exiled Athenians, men who had been banished for their support of the government of the Four Hundred, and who now stood under the definite protection of Sparta. They at once united with the aristocratic element in the city in perfecting arrangements for a new aristocratic revolution. The old political clubs were reorganized under even more efficient central control; the extreme oligarchs, under the lead of Critias, made common cause with the moderate faction of Theramenes; and finally, supported by Lysander in person, they carried through, without violence, a complete revolution. Nominally the board of Thirty Commissioners who were appointed were to draw up a new constitution and to administer the government only until that should be adopted, but in fact they became an irresponsible governing board, with a Senate entirely subservient to them. The popular courts and the Ecclesia, the real strongholds of democratic power, were abolished outright.

This new oligarchy of 404 B.C. was thus in part thrust upon the city by Spartan dictation, and was in part due to the attempt of the returned oligarchical exiles to secure their own safety. But beyond these causes was a real revival of the old movement of the intelligent and substantial citizens to rid the city of the abuses of the radical democracy. Doubtless some of the supporters of the former oligarchy had lost hope of reform, had become convinced that a limited democracy was impracticable, and had decided that the evils of the old democracy were less than those of any government which could be secured in its place. But a large body of honest citizens supported the new movement, expecting it to result, not in an oligarchy at all, but in a democracy with franchise limited to the three upper property classes.¹

But almost from the start the new administration fell under the control of its own worst elements, the returned exiles of the extreme oligarchical faction, led by Critias. Returning with the most violent hatred of the democracy which had banished him, Critias conducted the administration in disregard of all rights of person and property. A minority, led by Theramenes, attempted to stand against this criminal exercise of power, as Theramenes had successfully stood against the abuses of the Four Hundred; but the attempt failed, and Theramenes lost his life. The faction of Critias pushed on, throwing off all pretense of reform, and took forcible possession of the city, killing or expelling all who opposed them. The result was the rally of the democratic exiles under Thrasybulus, and the restoration of democratic government.

The struggle of the exiled democrats to win their return had brought to the front a democratic leader of the best type, Thrasybulus. It was fortunate for the restored democracy that it was to begin its new career, not under men of the Cleon-Cleophon type, but led by a man of real power, of broad views, and of unquestioned patriotism. Thrasybulus saw that the first problem of the new government was to help conservative and democrat to forget the bloody attacks and reprisals of the past eight years, and to persuade the long-separated factions to unite, loyally and generously, as one people. The amnesty had provided for the exclusion of the extreme oligarchs from the city, for the peaceable withdrawal to Eleusis of all who preferred to cast in their lot with them, and for the ample protection of those of their former supporters who were ready to resume their allegiance to the democracy. Thrasybulus's problem now was to persuade the excitable, passionate people to abide faithfully by these terms of amnesty, to live up to its spirit as well as its letter. And this was no easy task: exiles of the democrats came back to live side by side with men who had actively supported an administration which had murdered their brothers, confiscated their property, and driven them and their families homeless into foreign cities. It was hard to see these men of the city party living unpunished, prosperous, possessed of all the rights of citizenship, and gradually resuming their places in the administrative offices or the Senate. Even the great influence of Thrasybulus was not sufficient to prevent attacks in the courts upon former members of the city party.

One of the first of these attacks came from Lysias himself. Eratosthenes, the member of the board of Thirty who was commonly believed to be least compromised by their crimes, ventured to take advantage of a special provision of the amnesty by which any member of that board might remain in the city if he would submit to the regular accounting for his conduct in office. Lysias, whose brother had been arrested by Eratosthenes in person, when he might, perhaps, have prevented his death, attacked him in the court of accounting (Speech XII, Against Eratosthenes, 403 B.C.), and made every effort to arouse the hostility of the jury against the conservative members of the late government. We do not know the outcome of the trial, but it is probable that the conservative influence in the jury was strong enough to restrain them from taking the vengeance for which Lysias pleaded.

Some three years later Lysias was employed to write a speech for a substantial citizen who had been a supporter of the Thirty, and who was now a candidate for office. He was attacked at his δοκιμασία on the ground that the supporters of the oligarchy ought to be considered ineligible for office under the restored democracy. Lysias (Speech XXV, Apologia, c. 400 B.C.) warns the democracy that such a policy will only perpetuate division and weaken their own administration, and he vigorously attacks the petty politicians who are trying to stir up party strife as a means of maintaining their own unworthy leadership.

Shortly after this Lysias was retained to prepare a speech for the prosecution of Nicomachus, on the ground of unjustifiable delay in completing a revision of the laws, for which he was a special commissioner. Lysias in this speech (XXX, Against Nicomachus, 399/8 B.C.) makes an incidental, but serious, charge that the defendant had helped pave the way for the establishment of the Thirty. He thus tries to revive the old bitterness, for the advantage of his client, in a case which has no connection with the events of 404.

About the same time he was employed to write the main speech for the prosecution of Agoratus, a man of servile origin, who had received citizenship for supposed services to the democracy at the time of the first oligarchy (Speech XIII, Against Agoratus, c.
Before the establishment of the Thirty, Agoratus had sworn away the lives of certain prominent democratic opponents of the movement. He is now prosecuted by the family of one of these victims, and Lysias makes every effort to excite the anger of the jury against the Thirty and all of their tools. The defendant was probably guilty enough, and a political adventurer who deserved little mercy, but he was fairly under the protection of the amnesty, and the attack upon him was a menace to the harmony of the reunited factions. Lysias, as a paid advocate, was arousing passions which had been allayed only by patient effort, and was showing himself a better pleader than statesman.

About this time he wrote another speech (Speech XXXI, Against Philon, c. 398 B.C.) for a client who was to attack a man who had been exiled by the Thirty, but who did not take up arms with the other exiles to secure the return. This man Philon was now a candidate for the Senate. Most of Lysias's attack is based upon Philon's failure to help overthrow the Thirty. The appeal is to the old enmities, though pressed less forcibly than in some of the other speeches.

Some years after these attacks we find Lysias on the other side, writing a speech in defense of Mantitheus, a young knight who was accused of having served in the cavalry of the Thirty (Speech XVI, For Mantitheus, 394–389 B.C.). His enemies now seek to exclude him from office on this ground. In his skillful defense Lysias almost entirely ignores the political principle involved, merely appealing briefly to the fact that many of the cavalry of the Thirty had already held office since the restoration. We are disappointed to find no frank discussion of the political question, and no appeal on the ground of living up to the spirit of the amnesty.

Twenty-one years after the fall of the Thirty, Lysias was again employed to prepare a speech attacking an active supporter of that administration (Speech XXVI, Against Evander, 382 B.C.). Evander, an office-holder under the Thirty, was now a candidate for the archonship. In a vigorous attack upon him Lysias maintains that such a man should be excluded from office, and that he should be grateful that he is permitted to vote and sit on juries. He lays down the principle that those who held office in the oligarchy should be absolutely excluded from office in the democracy, a principle opposed to the whole spirit of the amnesty, and to the earnest conviction of the ablest democratic leaders.

The extant speeches of Lysias are only a fragment of his works, and probably give only a partial idea of his activity in connection with the questions growing out of the restoration of the democracy. As a foreigner Lysias had no direct share in politics, but as an advocate, writing speeches for others, he had a strong influence. From the extant speeches it would appear that his influence was, on the whole, against the harmony of the old factions; that, while his pen was occasionally at the service of men of the city party unjustly attacked, yet his most hearty service was rendered in seeking revenge on the aristocrats. There is in these speeches no sign of large, broad political views, of a grasp of the real issues involved, or of a great desire to see a united Athens.
THE SPEECH AGAINST ERATOSTHENES

INTRODUCTION

This speech was delivered soon after the overthrow of the Thirty, probably in the autumn of 403 B.C. It is an attack upon Eratosthenes, one of the Thirty, and involves the discussion of the whole administration of that body, and to some extent of that of the Four Hundred, the oligarchy of 411 B.C. Eratosthenes had been a supporter of the first oligarchy and a member of the second. Early in the administration of the Thirty he had set forth with others of their number to arrest certain rich metic. It fell to him to seize Polemarchus, Lysias's brother, who was immediately put to death (§§ 5–25). When, after the battle at Munychia (Spring, 403), most of the Thirty retired to Eleusis, Eratosthenes, with one other of their number, remained in Athens, though not as a member of the new governing board of Ten. In the final amnesty between the two parties it was provided that any one of the Thirty who was willing to risk a judicial examination of his conduct as a member of the late administration might remain in the city. Otherwise all were obliged to settle at Eleusis or remain permanently in exile. Eratosthenes, believing himself to be less compromised than the others of the Thirty, ventured to remain and submit to his "accounting."

1 For an account of the two oligarchies, see Introd. p. 32 ff., and Chron. Appendix.
2 For the doubtful claim that he was a member of the Central Committee that planned the second movement, see on § 43.
4 The office that the Thirty had held was nominally that of Συγγραφείς, commissioners for revision of the constitution.
XII. AGAINST ERATOSTHENES

The constitution provided an elaborate system of accounting by all public officers at the close of their year of office. This involved the examination of their record by a board of state auditors (Ἀγνωστοὶ), a review of their findings by a jury of five hundred, and the fullest opportunity for prosecution of complaints against them by any private citizen. The accounting included not only their handling of public funds, but every act of their administration. But it is possible that for the accounting of members of the late oligarchical administration a special tribunal was established. We know that in one respect the jury was peculiar, for Aristotle tells us (Resp. Ath. 39. 6) that it was provided in the amnesty that their accounting should be before a jury taken from the three upper property classes—a wise provision for securing a fair hearing.

The regular time for accounting was at the close of the civil year, July–August, but as the democracy came back to power early in October, it is in every way probable that the court, whether by ordinary or extraordinary process, was immediately summoned, and that they heard not only the accounting of Eratosthenes, but that of subordinate members of the late administration. Before this court Lysias appeared, charging Eratosthenes with the murder of Polemarchus, and demanding the penalty of death. He could count on the support of the radical democrats, who found it by no means easy to accept the terms of amnesty dictated by Sparta. But this element was in the minority in a jury made up as this was. The more moderate democrats, notably Thrasybulus, the hero of the Return, were totally opposed to any attempt to strike back at the city party. With these there were also on the jury some of the former supporters of the Thirty.¹

The task then which Lysias undertook was difficult. He had to convince the jury that the one man of the Thirty who was commonly believed least responsible for their crimes was so guilty that he was not to be forgiven, at a time when the watchword of the leaders of both parties was “Forgive and forget.” He had to reopen questions which had been settled, arouse resentments which had been allayed with great sacrifice of personal feeling, and urge the jury to act upon a principle which, if further extended in the treatment of members of the city party, would be fraught with the gravest danger. For at this crisis everything depended upon holding together the long-contending aristocratic and democratic parties. The real question of the day was as to the power of the democracy to regain the confidence and support of the great conservative middle class, men who had formerly been represented by Theramenes, and later by Eratosthenes. If these men could be convinced that the restored democracy would use its power moderately, foregoing revenge for the past, turning its back upon the demagogue and the political blackmailer (συνοφάντης), there was hope for the future.

But if the jury should support the attack on Eratosthenes, it would seem like a declaration of the opposite policy. No one could blame the Sicilian Lysias for seeking his personal revenge,—he could hardly be expected to put the good of the Athenian state before the satisfaction of his personal feelings,—but the question for the Athenian jurymen was whether to begin a policy of revenge at the moment when the policy of forgiveness had brought rest after a long and bitter struggle. It is this larger political aspect of the case which gives to the speech against Eratosthenes its historical interest. It was one of the first tests,—perhaps the first,—of the genuineness of the reconciliation. Nothing could be more just than to declare that the man who had stood with the Thirty in their guilty prosperity, however reluctantly, must fall with them under their penalty; but nothing could be more unwise. To distinguish between those of the Thirty who had sought to establish personal tyranny, and those who had honestly striven for a reformed, conservative democracy, was of first importance. The question of the hour was how to bring together the triumphant popular party and the large body of honest, patriotic citizens who had failed in their two attempts to establish a government better than the democracy, and had been betrayed into the attitude of supporting an outrageous tyranny.

Men there were of the late administration who were to be punished, — the men who had used the movement for their personal power and enrichment and to gratify personal hatred. But the great body of their supporters, and perhaps some of the leaders themselves, were to be so treated as to make it clear that the restored democracy was to be a government for the whole people, not another tyranny of class over class.

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

I. Προοίμιον, Exordium, §§ 1–3.

In the opening words of a speech an expression of perplexity as to how to begin, in view of the difficulty of the task, was a commonplace of the rhetoricians. Lysias gives a bright turn and challenges attention by reversing the thought, and saying — with exaggeration — that his only difficulty will be to find an end. Cicero uses the same device, Manilian Law, § 3, Huius autem orationis difficilior est exitum quam principium invenire. Ita mihi non tam copia quam modus in dicendo quaerendus est.

In § 2 attention is quickened by another reversal of an ordinary thought. “Sycophancy” had become so much of a trade that it was quite a matter of course for the prosecutor to explain at the outset that he had good reason for appearing in the case, some personal or family injury to avenge, or some obligation of friendship to the persons aggrieved. Lysias recalls this custom, but uses it in a novel way to arouse at the outset the resentment of the jury against the defendant and his friends. But before he leaves the point he really follows the custom, alludes to his motives, and adds that in this he is in reality the representative of the interests of the jury themselves.

§ 3 concludes the proem with another commonplace expression of perplexity, based on his inexperience in pleading.

The proem is thus made up largely of commonplace, formal pleas of the rhetorical schools, but is made effective by novel turns of the thought.

The sentence structure is at the beginning artificial; parallelism of cola,\(^1\) with antithesis, pervades the first two sections:

\text{oûk} \, \text{άρξασθαι} \, \muοι \, \text{δοκεῖ} \, \text{άπορον} \, \varepsilon \, \text{ίναι} \, \delta \, \text{άνδρες} \]

\text{άλλα} \, \text{παύσασθαι λέγοντι} \]

\text{τοιμάτα} \, \text{αύτοῖς} \, \text{τὸ} \, \text{μέγεθος} \]

\text{καὶ} \, \text{τοσαῦτα} \, \text{τὸ} \, \text{πλῆθος} \, \text{αὐργασται} \]

\text{ὡςτε} \, \text{μήτ} \, \text{άν} \, \text{ψευδόμενον} \]

\text{μήτ} \, \text{τάληθῆ} \, \text{βουλόμενον} \, \text{εἰπεῖν} \]

\text{άπαντα} \, \text{δύνασθαι} \]

\text{άλλα} \, \text{άνάγκη} \]

\text{ἡ} \, \text{τῶν} \, \text{κατήγορον} \, \text{ἀπειπεῖν} \]

Here the balance of cola is repeatedly strengthened by similarity of sound in words holding like position in the two cola (cp. App. § 57. 3):

| — ἀρξασθαι | — τοιμάτα τὸ μέγεθος | — ἀπειπεῖν |
| — παύσασθαι | — τοσαῦτα τὸ πλῆθος | — ἐπιλυπεῖν |

While these formal devices give a distinctly rhetorical tone to the opening, they are less formal and less obtrusive than the devices in the openings of Gorgias or Antiphon. The members of a pair of cola are in only one case (the last pair) precisely symmetrical, and the length of the cola — in strong contrast with those of \(^1\) For the terms "colon" and "period," see App. § 44.

Gorgias — is sufficient to give dignity and to prevent the impression of petty play on sound.

II. Διήγησις, Narratio, §§ 4-19.
Lysias does not need to state the case, for the clerk of the court has read to the jury the formal complaint. The speaker can pass at once to the narrative of the conduct upon which he bases his attack. And here he is at his best. In the simplest language he describes the life of his own family and their suffering at the hands of the Thirty. As the narrative proceeds, the sentences become very short, significant details of the story follow rapidly, and the hearer is made to see the events as if passing before his eyes.¹ The devices of the rhetorician do now and then appear in artificial pairs of cola:

\begin{align*}
\text{τιμωρεῖοσθάι} & \mu\nu \delta\kappaε\iota \nu \\
\text{τῷ} & \delta^{2} \ \varepsilon\gamma\iota \ \chiρματίζεοσθαί \end{align*}
(Note the chiastic order.)

\begin{align*}
\text{τὴν} & \ \mu\nu \ \pi\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \pi\epsilon\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \\
\text{τὴν} & \ \delta^{2} \ \alpha\rho\chi\omicron\nu \ \delta\epsilon\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \chiρματὼν \end{align*}

§ 7. \[
\begin{align*}
\text{ἀποκτεινύναι} & \ \mu\nu \ \ldots \ \pi\epsilon\omicron \ \omega\omicron\delta\nu\omicron\omicron \ \iota\gamma\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \\
\text{λαμβάνειν} & \ \delta\varepsilon \ \ldots \ \pi\epsilon\omicron \ \pi\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \epsilon\piοιο\omicron\omicron \omicron \omicron \end{align*}
The rhymed ending adds to the artificial structure of this pair, as of the next (see App. § 57. 3 f.);

§ 7. \[
\begin{align*}
\text{ὡς} & \ \omicron\ \chiρματών \ \varepsilon\nu\epsilon\kappaα \ \tau\alpha\nu\tauα \ \pi\epsilon\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \\
\text{ἀλλὰ} & \ \sigma\omicron\mu\phi\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \tauη \ \pi\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \gamma\gamma\omicron\nu\omicron\omicron\omicron \omicron \end{align*}
But as he reaches the climax of his own ill treatment in §§ 10 and 11, and that of his brother's family in §§ 18 and 19, he passes over into strong periodic structure.

III. Παρέκβασις, Egressio, §§ 20-23.
The term "digression" applies to this section only as an interruption of the strictly logical order, which would require the presentation of the arguments (Πώσεις) before the attempt to move the feelings of the jury by denunciation. But it is a wise

order that Lysias chooses. With the narrative fresh in the minds of the jury he hastens to play upon the feeling of indignation that the narrative has aroused, and so to bring the jury to the hearing of his formal arguments with minds strongly prejudiced against the defendant. He does this by emphatic and indignant—sometimes pathetic—comments on the conduct that he has just described. (For similar use of the Παρέκβασις, see on 24. 7–9.)

The structure is for the most part periodic, with much of antithesis and amplification.

The summary statement of the crimes of the Thirty (§ 21) illustrates the periodic effect which may be given purely by similarity of form to a group of coördinate cola. (See App. § 46.)

After the proem and immediately before or after the "narrative" (with its possible "digression") the rhetoricians prescribed the Πρόθεσις, the statement of what the speaker proposes to prove. But here the narrative has already brought out the charge, showing it to rest upon an act which cannot be denied. Lysia's argument must therefore be directed to answering the excuses that Eratosthenes will urge. This Lysia brings before the jury in the Ερώτησις.

V. Πίστευς, Argumentatio, §§ 26–80.

A. Arguments based on the immediate charge, §§ 26–37.

In the form of a direct personal attack Lysia confronts Eratosthenes with the inconsistency between his claim that he tried in council to save Polemarchus and his conduct in seizing him. In this attack (§ 26) everything is marshaled in balanced antitheses; only in the middle period do the cola extend beyond the briefest, most emphatic forms:

εἰτ' ὃ σχετικῶτατε πάντων ἀντέλεγες μὲν ἵνα σώσεις συνελάμβανες δὲ ἵνα ἀποκτείνεις;

καὶ ὅτε μὲν τὸ πλῆθος ἦν ὁμόν κύριον . . . τῆς ἡμετέρας ἀντιλέγειν φήσ τοῖς βουλομένοις ἡμᾶς ἀπολέσωι
XII. AGAINST ERATOSTHENES

ἐπειδὴ δὲ ἐπὶ σοὶ μόνῳ ἐγένετο καὶ σῶσαι . . . καὶ μὴ eis τὸ δεσμωτήριον ἀπῆγαγες;

ἐλθ’ ὧτι μὲν, ὃς φήσ, ἀντειπὼν αὐθέν ἤφελθος ἀξιώσ χρηστὸς νομίζεσθαι

ὀτι δὲ συλλαβὼν ἀπέκτεινας οὐκ οἷς δεῖν ἐμὸι καὶ τούτους δούναι δίκην;

After this vigorous outburst Lysias settles down to the detailed argument addressed to the jury in answer to the defendant's claim that he acted against his will.

The language of §§ 27–36 is of a third Lysian type, differing from the set antitheses of the proem, and equally from the running style of the narrative. It is the natural form of argument, the sentence structure clear and simple, without padding to secure symmetry of form. The frequent use of questions of appeal enlivens the argument.

In the culminating passage in §§ 32–34, turning again to Eratosthenes, Lysias comes back to the more antithetic form of the previous attack (§ 26); but the antitheses are more those of short phrases than of whole cola:

οὐχ ὃς ἀνωμένου
ἀλλ' ὃς ἰδομένου

§ 33.
ἀ ἱσασι γεγενημένα
τῶν τότε λεγομένων

§ 33.
πάντα τὰ κακὰ εἰργασμένοις τὴν πόλιν πάντα τάγαθα περὶ αὐτῶν λέγειν

B. §§ 38–61. Lysias now passes from the crimes against his own family to the attack upon Eratosthenes's career as one of the oligarchs. He knows that there is a general belief that Eratosthenes was opposed to the worst crimes of the Thirty. He therefore tries to throw upon him the reproach of constant support of their action.
One period in the opening (§§ 39-40) is noteworthy for its even balance of cola:

\[\text{ἐπεὶ κελεύετε αὐτῶν ἀποδεῖξαι}\]
\[\text{ὅποιον τοσοῦτοι τῶν πολεμῶν ἀπέκτειναν}\]
\[\text{ὅσοι τῶν πολιτῶν}\]
\[\text{ἡ ναῖς ὁποιον τοσαῦτα ἔλαβον}\]

All of the specific attacks of this section (§§ 42-61) have a plausible sound, but no one of them is well sustained. Even if Eratosthenes did labor for the establishment of the Four Hundred, that was only what most of the best men in the city were doing; in their evil government he had no part. The charge that Eratosthenes was one of the prime movers in the second oligarchy (§§ 43-47) is vaguely supported and is not in itself probable. Apparently the charge is made in the attempt to put Eratosthenes into close connection with the detested Critias.

In the review of Eratosthenes’s conduct as one of the Thirty (§§ 48-52), Lysias can bring no specific charge beyond that of the arrest of Polemarchus. He tries to forestall the plea of Eratosthenes that he actively opposed certain of the crimes of the Thirty by the shrewd claim that this would only prove that he could safely have opposed them all. He finally (§§ 53-61) tries to give the impression that Eratosthenes was connected with the bad administration of the Board of Ten, a charge that seems to be entirely without foundation.

1 On the ὁμοιότελευτον, see App. § 57. 4.
To a jury already prejudiced by the affecting narrative of the arrest, and hurried on from one point to another, this whole attack was convincing; but the modern reader finds little of real proof, and an abundance of sophistry.

The language is clear and natural, in Lysias's characteristic argumentative style.

C. §§ 62-78.

Lysias comes now to the refutation of the main argument of the defense, that Eratosthenes was a member of that honorable minority among the Thirty who opposed the crimes of Critias's faction, and whose leader, Theramenes, lost his life in the attempt to bring the administration back to an honest course.

Whatever we may think of the real motives of Theramenes, there can be no question that at the time of this trial the people were already coming to think of him as a martyr for popular rights. All knew that Eratosthenes was his friend and supporter. Lysias saw therefore that he must blacken the character of Theramenes. He accordingly turns to a rapid review of his career. In a few clear-cut sentences he pictures Theramenes at each crisis, always the same shrewd, self-seeking, unscrupulous man, always pretending to serve the state, always ready to shift to the popular side, always serving his own interests.

The attack is a masterpiece. There is no intemperate language, no hurling of epithets. "He accuses by narrating. The dramatically troubled time from 411 to 403 rises before us in impressive pictures. At every turn Theramenes appears as the evil genius of the Athenians. His wicked egoism stands out in every fact." 1

Regarded as a product of rhetorical art, the attack on Theramenes merits only admiration; but is this picture of Theramenes true to the facts? In his narrative Lysias selects those acts only upon which he can put a bad construction. He fails to tell us what appears so clearly in the narrative of Thucydides, 2 and in the defense put into the mouth of Theramenes by Xenophon in his answer to Critias before the Senate,\(^1\) that his opposition to the extreme faction of the Four Hundred was, whatever may have been his motive, an efficient cause of their overthrow, at a time when there was reason to fear that they were on the point of betraying the city to the Peloponnesians. Lysias has nothing to say of the period which immediately followed, during which Theramenes was at the head of a successful administration by a limited democracy,\(^2\) except to accuse him of treachery to his friends for securing the punishment of some of his former colleagues, a punishment which may have been fully deserved. He misrepresents Theramenes’s responsibility for the hard terms of the peace, and he ignores the fact that the final opposition to Critias which cost him his life was in every particular what would have been demanded of the most patriotic citizen. It is, indeed, possible to see in every act of Theramenes a cool, deliberate egoism, but it is also true that he sought his own advancement in every case save one by a policy which was in the interest of the conservative middle class.\(^3\)

Thucydides has a high opinion of his ability,\(^4\) but while he gives no explicit estimate of his moral character, he seems to look upon his opposition to the other faction of the Four Hundred as the result of personal ambition.\(^5\) His praise of the administration after the Four Hundred is rather praise of the form of government than of its leader.\(^6\)

Xenophon nowhere gives his own estimate of Theramenes, but he puts into his mouth\(^7\) an answer to Critias which is so complete, and which so well represents the true policy for the conservative middle class, that it seems impossible that Xenophon looked upon him as an unworthy leader of the party to which Xenophon himself belonged.

The tragic death of Theramenes soon led to the feeling that he had died a martyr to the rights of the people against the tyrants. Lysias evidently feels the danger of such a conviction even among the democrats of the jury. In the next generation opinions were sharply divided as to the character of Theramenes. Aristotle, to whom he stood as the representative of the ideal government by the upper classes, places him among the great men of Athens.¹

This section (§§ 62–78) presents a style of narrative very different from that of §§ 4–19, the story of the arrest. There we have the simplest statement of facts; the power of the narrative lies in the vividness with which we see the events, and the certainty of our feelings being stirred at the sight. Here Lysias is dealing with more complicated acts, and those which do not make their own appeal. He therefore at every step throws in with the narrative of the events his own interpretation of motive and result. By a phrase here, a single invidious word there, he shrewdly colors the medium through which we see the events. Every statement is so turned as to become an argument. It is a type of narrative which the effective speaker must master, an instrument the more effective because so subtle in its working.

¹ Resp. Ath. 28. 5, The best of the statesmen at Athens, after those of early times, seem to have been Nicias, Thucydides, and Theramenes. As to Nicias and Thucydides, nearly every one agrees that they were not merely men of birth and character, but also statesmen, and that they acted in all their public life in a manner worthy of their ancestry. On the merits of Theramenes opinion is divided, because it so happened that in his time public affairs were in a very stormy state. But those who give their opinion deliberately find him, not, as his critics falsely assert, overthrowing every kind of constitution, but supporting every kind so long as it did not transgress the laws; thus showing that he was able, as every good citizen should be, to live under any form of constitution, while he refused to countenance illegality and was its constant enemy (Kenyon’s trans.). For a summary of the modern discussions as to the character of Theramenes, see Busolt, Griechische Geschichte, III. ii. 1463.
The language of the section is simple, free from rhetorical forms; even antitheses are only sparingly used.

It is only in the concluding paragraph that the speaker passes over to the artificial, rhetorical form, in balanced periods. The amplification at the opening of § 78, with the striking repetition of καί in the long series (see App. § 58. 4), marks the change of style:

καὶ τοσοῦτων καὶ ἑτέρων κακῶν καὶ αἰσχῶν καὶ πάλαι καὶ νεωσὶ cαι μικρῶν καὶ μεγάλων αὐτίνοι γεγενημένοι τολμήσουσιν αὐτοὺς φίλους ὄντας ἀποφαίνειν οἷς ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἀποθανόντος Θηραμένους ἀλλ’ ὑπὲρ τῆς αὐτοῦ πονηρίας καὶ δικαίως μὲν ἐν ὀλιγαρχῇ δίκην δόντος ἡδὴ γὰρ αὐτῆν κατέλυσε δικαίως δ’ ἄν ἐν δημοκρατίᾳ δις γὰρ ὑμᾶς κατεδουλώσατο τῶν μὲν παρόντων καταφρονῶν tῶν δὲ ἀπόντων ἐπιθυμῶν καὶ τῷ καλλίστῳ ὑνόματι χρώμενος dεινοτάτων ἔργων διδάσκαλος καταστάς.

Here, as the period advances, every part falls into the artificial, balanced form, culminating in the four formal cola which sum up Theramenes's character with the brevity and sharpness of an epigram.¹

VI. Ἐπίλογος, Peroratio, §§ 81–100.

The peroration opens with a vigorous appeal to the resentment of the people against the Thirty. By ignoring the specific charge against Eratosthenes, Lysias is able to throw upon him the hatred of the jury for the crimes of the whole administration.

He then arouses suspicion against any who may appear as witnesses or supporters of Eratosthenes in his defense, by trying to make the jury believe that the city is still in danger from oligarchical plots. To the plea that Eratosthenes was the best man among the Thirty, he makes the keen reply of the rhetorician, “That only proves him to be worse than any other citizen.”

After shrewdly warning the jury that to acquit Eratosthenes will be to convict themselves of approving the conduct of the Thirty, Lysias makes a direct appeal to the representatives of each of the two parties. It is a most effective plea, and as a summing up against the Thirty worthy only of admiration. But as a summing up against Eratosthenes it has the fault of the whole speech, the unfair heaping upon him of crimes which he did not instigate, and in the commission of which he probably took even a passive part only by compulsion.

The final section (§§ 99–100), addressed to men already deeply moved by the recital of their wrongs, brings them in the most solemn way face to face with their duty to avenge the dead, and, by an appeal that works upon the most profound feelings, warns them of the presence and earnest watchfulness of the spirits who look to them for the punishment of their murderers. It is a fine artistic sense which leads the speaker, after raising the feelings of the jury to such a pitch, to close with words of absolute simplicity,—Παύσωμαι κατηγορῶν. ἀκηκώσατε, ἐσφάκατε, τετόνθατε,—ἐξέτε—δικάζετε.

The language suited to a peroration is different from that of narrative or argument. It is addressed more to the feelings; and as holding the formal place of dignity at the close, it admits of more formal structure. Both considerations tend to throw the thought into periodic form. The thought of §§ 81–84 is of itself an antithesis, and the antithetic structure inevitably pervades the passage. It is dignified, with less apparent striving for formal balance of phrase and colon than we sometimes find in Lysias’s antitheses. The questions of appeal are especially fitting to a peroration (§§ 82 close–84).
In the section §§ 84–89 there is a steady advance in balance of form until from § 87 on almost every sentence has its pair of antithetic cola.

The final section (§§ 99–100) falls almost entirely within periodic forms, but without any petty play on sound or artificial balance to mar the earnestness of the appeal.

The study of the style of this speech is especially interesting because it is the only extant speech which Lysias wrote for his own delivery,¹ and one of the first in his career as a practical speech writer. In preparing each of his other speeches he had to adapt the speech to the man who was to deliver it; in this he was free to follow his judgment of what a speech should be. He was already well known as a student of rhetoric; he now undertook to apply his rhetorical theory to a practical case which was of the utmost importance to himself, and which involved great public questions.

¹The _Olympic Speech_ (XXXIII) was probably spoken by Lysias, but we have a mere fragment of it.

various meanings of ὑπάρχειν see on § 23.

1. πείγεσθαι: πάσχω has here its simplest meaning, experience. πάσχω = I am acted upon in distinction from ποιῶ I act. The idea of “suffering” would come only from the context or the addition of a specific word (e.g. κακῶς).

— ἐν τῷ πρὸ τοῦ χρόνῳ: other expressions for the same idea are ἐν τῷ πρῶτον χρόνῳ 21. 25; ἐν τῇ ἐμπρόσθεν χρόνῳ 19. 45, 19. 53; ἐν τῷ τέως χρόνῳ 7. 12, 21. 19, 27. 16, 28. 3. But in Athens “sycophancy” had become such a trade that when one man accused another in court, the presumption often was that it was a case of blackmail (cp. on 22. 1). Hence as a precaution against that supposition an honest prosecutor regularly tries to show to the jury at the outset that he or his family or his close friends have personal reasons for wishing to see the defendant punished. — τοὺς καθηγο-ροῦντας: the prosecutor is usually called ὁ διώκων (cp. 10. 11), or ὁ καθηγορῶν, or ὁ καθηγορός (cp. § 1). The defendant is ὁ φεύγων (cp. εἰρήγομεν § 4). — πυρήνασθαι: inquire, the conative present of πυθέσθαι to learn. jective ὃς see on 16. 8. — τοὺς λόγους ποιοῦμαι: a slightly more formal expression than λέγω; cp. English, “I make the statement” and “I speak.” The thought underlying the sentence is, ‘Do not imagine that I am emphasizing their hostility to the whole city from any lack of personal complaints of my own. I, the metic, wish to call your attention to the complaints which you all have, before I proceed to present my personal and family wrongs.’ — ἀλλ’ ὡς ἀπασί κτλ.: but assuming that all have great abundance (of matter) for anger because of their public acts. — ἀφθονίας ὀργίζεσθαι: abundance for anger; in this expression the English demands the more precise statement, abundance of matter for, abundance of cause for, but we too use the vague expression in “abundance for his support,” “abundance for eating and drinking.” — ὑπέρ: force, see on ὀργίζεσθαι § 80.

3. ἐγὼ μὲν ὦν: now I. μὲν ὦν originally connected its clause with the preceding through ὦν, and set it in contrast with some-
the Clerk of the Court had read Lysias’s formal complaint, so that the speaker does not need to name the defendant at this point.—κατ-έστην: as the perfect of this verb is used as a present, “the aorist may take a perfect translation” (GS. 249) and govern a subordinate clause as a primary tense (GS. 252). — τὴν κατηγορίαν ποιήσωμαι: cp. τοὺς λόγους ποιοῦμαι § 2. The Ms. reading is ποιήσωμαι. For the question of mood involved see Crit. Note.—δι’ ἑλαχίστων: the usual expression is διὰ βραχυτάτων, as in § 62, 16. 9, 24. 4. Cp. διὰ βραχέων ἔρω I will tell in a few words, 24. 5.

4. Here, the aorist with a ‘definite number’ (GS. 243). Otherwise φικήσε would usually mean settled (inceptive aorist), in distinction from φικεν lived.—οὔτε ἑδικασάμεθα οὔτε ἑφύγομεν: as a student of rhetoric, and perhaps already a teacher of pleading, Lysias is liable to the suspicion which the common men of the jury have against the professional rhetorician; he here forestalls this. Nor has his family been guilty of the prevalent sycophancy, nor of attempting to resist by litigation the claims of others. They have lived the quiet and careful life that befits a family who receive the hospitality of the city. As to the rights of metics in the courts see Introd. p. 44.—ἐδικασάμεθα: still another term for the prosecution of a case; cp. on τοὺς κατηγοροῦν-τας § 2.—μήτε . . . μήτε: on the παρίσωσις see App. § 57. 2.—ἐξα-μαρτάνειν: in ἑδικασάμεθα and ἑφύγομεν (aorist) he denies every

tion from λέγων; the falsity of the assertion is commonly implied. — οὐ... ἐτόλμων: they could not bring themselves. τολμᾶν is wicked daring (so in § 2) or good courage, according to the context. The use of the imperf. with οὐ adds to the idea of resistance that is in the word itself. “The negative imperfect commonly denotes resistance to pressure or disappointment.
Simple negation is aoristic” (GS.

οὐδὲν ἐτόλμω πεθέσθιμ 32 2: οὐκ щитελε 32. 12. For a little time the Thirty did live up to their professions. Aristotle says of them:
At first, indeed, they behaved with moderation towards the citizens and pretended to administer the state according to the ancient constitution... and they destroyed the professional accusers and those mischievous and evil-minded persons who, to the great detriment of the democracy, had attached themselves to it in order to curry favor with it. With all of this the city was much pleased, and thought that the Thirty did it with the best of motives. But so soon as they had got a firmer hold on the city, they spared no class of citizens, but put to death any persons who were eminent for wealth or birth or character (Resp. Ath.
35, Kenyon’s tr.). Xenophon gives similar testimony, Hell. 2. 3. 12.

6. γάρ: explicative γάρ. See on 19. 12. — ἐν τοῖς τριάκοντα: ἐν is the regular expression for at a meeting of; so ἐν τοῖς Ἀμφικτύ-οιν at the meeting of the Amphictyons, Aes. 3. 114; ἐν τοῖς αὐτῶις δικασταῖς, at a session of the same court, Ant. 6. 23. Cp. ἐν τῇ βουλῇ § 77, ἐν τῷ δήμῳ 16. 20, ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ 19. 50. The reference here is to the discussion of the matter at a session of the Thirty by themselves, at their headquarters, the Tholus. From § 25 we conclude that the proposition was carried thence to the Senate and there discussed and acted upon. The Tholus, a building near the senate-house, was the headquarters and dining-hall of the Pryta-nes. It was thus the natural center of the administration of the Thirty, who used the subservient Senate to give a form of legality to their own acts. — δείσθαι χρημάτων: when the Thirty took control they found the treasury exhausted by the expenses of the Peloponnesian War. They had not only to provide for the ordinary expenses of the government, but to pay their Spartan garrison on the Acropolis. Xenophon says (Hell. 2. 3. 21) that the despoiling of the metics was to meet the latter expense.

7. ἀποκτινύναι ... ἐποιοῦντο: for the periodic form see App. § 57. 3. — ἐδοξέω: note that the preliminary process and the attitude of mind are expressed by the imperfs. ἐπείθον, ἤγοντο, ἐποιοῦντο; the final decision, the “upshot” of it all, by the aorist ἐδοξέω. GS. 238. — δέκα: these were certainly the first arrests of metics by the Thirty. Xenophon says (Hell. 2. 3. 21) that each member of the Thirty was to arrest one metic; this was probably on a later occasion. Diodorus says (14. 5. 6) that the Thirty executed the sixty richest foreigners; this may be the whole number executed under their administration. — ἀντὶ τοὺς ἄλλους: in the case of the rest (of the ten metics). — ὡς οὐ κτέ.: on the παρίσωσις see App. § 57. 2. — συμφέροντα: predicate, in agreement with ταύτα; related to γεγένηται as χρημάτων ἕνεκα το πέπρακται.

8. ἐβάδιζον: they set forth.
The imperfect, as the tense that presents an act as in progress, is sometimes used to present the act as it gets under way; we see the act in progress in its first stage, the beginning of its evolution.
Some would name this the ingresfect of evolution (see A.J.P. XVI, noteworthy. Great force is given the aorists of summary statement decree of the supreme governing body, and at all times, even under the democracy, search of the house and arrest of a criminal were open to the proper officers acting under such a warrant. But this authority was outrageously abused by the Thirty. The patriot Thrasybulus reminds his followers of their sufferings under such treatment:

δειπνοῦντες συνελαμβανόμεθα καὶ καθεδοῦντες καὶ ἄγοράζοντες we were seized at table, in bed, in the agora (Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 14).
— ἐργαστήριον: the shield factory.
— ἀπεγράφοντο: the usual word for an inventory. For the causative middle see HA. 815; G. 1245;
B. 505; Gl. 500 d.
9. εἶπον οὖν, . . . ἥπιστάμην µὲν οὖν: I said therefore, . . .
now I knew. The first οὖν is in-ferential, the second, transitional, marking the passage from the narrative to the parenthetical remark.
See on § 3 (B). — νομίζει: the ordinary word with θεούς (cp. Plato Apol. 26 c ταῦτα λέγω, ός τὸ παράπαν οὐ νοµίζεις θεούς); but it has, as used here, so much of the idea of 'respect,' 'fear,' that the speaker can even add ἀνθρώ-pους. The retention of the indic.
in νομίζει (ind. discourse with the secondary ἥπιστάμην) is a part of the increasing vividness with which Lysias recalls the events as his narrative advances, and which brings in the historical present (ἀνοίγυμι) in the following sentence. — ἐκ τῶν παρόντων: ἐκ, because the circumstances are viewed as the source of the conviction.
10. σώσειν: tense, HA. 948 a;
G. 1286; B. 549. 2; Gl. 578,
60 ἐνότα καλεῖ τῶν ὑπηρετῶν δύο, καὶ τὰ ἐν τῇ κυβωτῷ

11. ὠμολόγησεν: sc. λαβεῖν, cp. σῶσαι χρήματα λαβών § 8. — κυβικηνοὺς: sc. στατήρας. For the sums mentioned see App. § 61 f. This was only the ready money which Lysias happened to have in his strong box; perhaps the ready money of the shield manufactory. In addition to this, Lysias lost his house, his share in the stock and tools in the shield factory, and his share in the 120 slaves (§ 19). Yet it would appear from the accounts of his later contributions to the patriot cause that a considerable amount of his property escaped the hands of the Thirty (see p. 20, n. 1). — ἀγαπήσει: the direct form is ἀγαπήσεσις, εἰ τὸ σῶμα σώσεσις you may consider yourself lucky, if you save your skin. The curt sarcasm well expresses the brutality of the whole proceeding. ἀγαπήσεις is a 'jussive' future.

GS. 269; HA. 844; G. 1265; B. 583 n. 1. For the mood of σώσεις see HA. 899; G. 1405; Gl. 648.

12. ἐπιτυγχάνει: the verb agrees, as often, with the first of the two noms.; but the two being once expressed, the plural naturally follows in ἀπιόντες, καταλαμβάνοντι, ἐρωτῶσιν. By the same usage ἐξεισκεὶ might have been singular. — βαδίζομεν: optative after ἐρωτῶσιν, a historical present. HA. 932. 2; G. 1268, 1487; B. 517. 1, 581; Gl. 661. — εἰς τάδελφον ... εἰς Δαμνίππου: the Greek idiom is precisely the same as the colloquial English. — σκέψηται: the same sarcastic tone as in the preceding. The hearer feels with what cruel unconcern these robbers treated their victims.
μὲν οὖν ἐκέλευν βαδίζειν, ἐμὲ δὲ μεθ’ αὐτῶν ἀκολούθησίν εἰς Δαμνίππου. Πείσων δὲ προσελθὼν συγάν μοι παρεκκελέυσέν καὶ θαρρεῖν, ὡς ἦξον ἔκεισε. καταλαμβάνομεν δὲ αὐτόθι Θέογνων ἐτέρων φυλάττοντα· ὃ 75 παραδόντες ἐμὲ πάλιν ὄχεντο. ἐν τοιούτῳ δ’ οὖν μοι κινδυνεύειν ἑδόκει, ὡς τοῦ γε ἀποθανεῖν ὑπάρχοντος ἡδονή. καλέσας δὲ Δαμνίππου λέγω πρὸς αὐτὸν τάδε, "ἔπιτηδείος μὲν μοι τυγχάνεις ὃν, ἦκω δ’ εἰς τὴν σὴν ὁικίαν, ἀδικῶ δ’ οὔδεν, χρημάτων δ’ ἔνεκα ἀπόλλυμαι. 80 σὺ οὖν ταῦτα πάσχουτί μοι πρόθυμον παράσχω τὴν — μὲν οὖν: force, see on § 3. — βαδίζειν: to go on his way, cp. on ἐβαδίζειν § 8. 13. συγάν: Lysias would have us suspect that Pison was planning to keep for himself, the confiscated money.— ὡς ἦξον ἔκεισε: ‘on the understanding that he would come there’; for ὡς ‘subjective’ see on 16. 8. — κινδυνεύειν ἑδόκει, ὡς . . . ὑπάρχοντος: it seemed to me wise to make a venture, believing that death at any rate was to be counted on already, i.e. whatever risks might be involved in any attempt to escape, one risk at least (γε), and that the supreme one, was already upon me (ὑπάρχοντος, see on ὑπάρχει § 23). κινδυνεύειν is usually to meet danger, to be in danger, but it is used here for ἀπόκινδυνεύειν or παρακινδυνεύειν = to take a risk; cp. 1. 45 ἄν . . . τοιοῦτον κινδύνου ἐκινδύνευον would I have taken such a risk; 4. 17 ἀλλ’ ἀπεκινδύνευον τούτο ἐμοί but I took this risk. 14. Δαμνίππος: this is all that we know of Damnippus; he was evidently a trusted adherent of the Thirty.— ἀδικῶ: I am guilty (not I am doing wrong). A present state or condition viewed as the result of a past action is usually represented in Greek, as in English, by the perfect; but certain words in Greek frequently express this idea by the present: A. Words of hearing and saying, ἀκούω, πυθάνομαι (12. 62), αἰσθάνομαι, γιγνώσκω, μανθάνω, λέγω. B. Words of coming and going, especially ἦκω and οὖχομαι, Ι am come, I am gone (not I am on the way). C. ἁδικῶ (12. 82, 25. 1, 25. 24), φείγω (12. 57), νικῶ (12. 36), κρατῶ, ἤττωμαι, στέρωμαι (and all verbs of privation, GS. 204), and some others. Kühn. § 382. 4. — ἀπόλλυμαι: the action is already under way, I am being destroyed. The change to direct discourse in the series of brief clauses with the repeated "and" reproduces the breathless earnestness and haste of the appeal. This earnestness of feeling leads Lysias into one of his rare personifications, that of SvvajXLv by the personal epithet irpoOvfiov; for other examples see Introd. p. 25, n. 5.

The irregularity in this otherwise symmetrical sentence lies in the fact that after the second main protasis (ēan ἰεν λάθω) the governing verb is repeated in new form (ήγούμην replacing ἐνθυμομένω), which shifts the construction of the apodosis from the fut. indic. of indir. disc. with ὅτι, to the fut. infin. of indir. disc. This insertion of ἤγούμην makes the thought clearer to the listener by separating the second principal protasis from the subordinate ones that follow. This separation is further strengthened by shifting from the subj. in the leading pair of protases to the opt. of ind. disc. in the subordinate protasis. — ἡγούμην μὲν: μὲν is drawn to the leading verb from its natural position after εἰ. Such displacement of μὲν throws emphasis upon the word that it follows. So in 16. 18. For corresponding displacement of δὲ see on 16. 7. — εἰ δὲ μή: a stereotyped expression which may be used even when there is no place for the negative. Here with neg. force; so in 22. 6, 22. 21. Without neg. force, 12. 50.

16. ἐφευγον: set forth. The impf. pictures the flight in its beginning, where the aor. would merely state the fact of flight. See on ἐβάδυζον § 8. — αὐλεῖως θύρα: defined by Harpocration (s.v. αὐλεῖος) as ἡ ἀπὸ τῆς οἰκίας the front door, street door. The term ἀμφιθύρος (§ 15) must mean that the house had a second outer door, though we have no knowledge of such an arrangement except from this passage. The third door through which Lysias passed may have opened through a garden wall into a back street. — But we have no facts on which to base anything more than conjecture. For the plan of the Greek house see Gardner, “The Greek House,” Journal of Hellenic Studies, 21 (1901), 293 ff.; Gulick, Life of the Ancient Greeks, p. 21 ff.; Gardner and Jevons, Manual of Greek Antiquities, p. 31 ff.; Smith, Dicy Greek and Roman Antiq., article “Domus.” — εἰς ἀστυ: cp. the English “to town.” Here ἀστυ is used as a proper name, the city in distinction from the Piraeus. Lysias’s custom varies as to the use of the article with ἀστυ; cp. εἰς ἀστυ 13. 24, 32. 8; εν ἀστεα 25. 1; but πρὸς τὸ ἀστυ 13. 80; εἰς τὸ ἀστυ 12. 54. Lysias sends Archeneos to the city as the speediest and surest means of learning whether his brother is under arrest, for he would be taken there by the arresting party. It does not imply that Polemarchus lived in the city rather than in the Piraeus.

17. τούτ'] ἐκείνον: ἐπὶ with gen. of a personal word = in the time of. So in 12. 42, 12. 65, 16. 3, 22. 9, 24. 25, 25. 21, 34. 4: — πίνειν: present tense, because this particular order is defined as an instance of the customary order. So Socrates’s jailor says χαλέπαινουσι καὶ καταρώνται, ἐπειδὰν αὐτοὺς παραγέλλω πίνειν τὸ φάρμακον they are angry and curse me, when I give them the order to drink the drug (Plato, Phaedo 116 c). — πρὶν εἰπεῖν: before telling, used loosely for without telling; cp. on 19. 7, πρὶν παραγενέσθαι. The English would allow the same loose expression, which comes from the underlying thought of the haste of the action. Aeschines uses πρὶν in the same way in speaking of the crimes of the Thirty, πλείων ἡ χιλίων καὶ πεντακοσίων τῶν πολιτῶν ἀκρίτων ἀπέκτειναν, πρὶν καὶ τὰς αἰτίας ἀκοῦσαν, ἐγὼ αἰς ἐμέλλον ἀποθνῄσκειν, καὶ οὐδ’ ἐπὶ τὰς ταφὰς καὶ ἐκφορὰς τῶν τελευτησάντων εἰσὶν τοὺς προσήκοντας παραγενέσθαι more than 1500 of the citizens they put to death without trial, before they even heard the charges on which they were about to die, and they would not even allow the relatives to be present at their funerals or to follow them to their graves, 3. 235. Cp. Ant. Tetral. Α γ 2 φείγοντες πρότερον ἡ ἀπέδνυσαν fleeing before they had time to strip them. With the coming of the Thirty to power all legal protection of citizens was thrown aside. One of the most common charges against them is that they condemned citizens to death without a trial, whereas the right of every citizen to trial with full opportunity for defense was one of the fundamental principles of the democracy. This right was extended tometics also.

18. ἀπεφέρετο: not ἐκφέρετο, because ἐκφέρειν is the usual word for the orderly funeral ceremony (cp. ἐξενεχθῆναι below). — οὐδεmᾶς: while οὐδεμᾶς depends on ἐξενεχθῆναι, the negative part of it goes over to ἔδοσαν; hence οὐ, not µη.—κλεισίον: see L. & S. κλεισίον. That the form is κλεισis determined by, inscriptions. — προῦθεντο: see the description of funeral customs in Gulick, 292 ff.; Becker’s Charicles, English ed.,
p. 383 ff.; Gardner and Jevons, Greek Antiquities, p. 360 ff.; Guhl and Koner, Life of the Greeks and Romans, p. 289 ff.
— εἰς τὴν ταφήν: see on εἰς σωτηρίαν § 14.

19. On the πολυσύνθετον of this section see App. § 58. 4. — τὸ δημόσιον: L. & S. s.v. III. 3. — ἀπέδοσαν: ἀπο— because the confiscated property belonged now to the state. — ἀπληστίαν καὶ αἰσχροkέρδειαν: the doubling of words merely for rhetorical effect is as rare in the simple style of Lysias as it is common in the rhetorical style of Demosthenes; see App.
§ 58. 2. — εἰς τοσαυτὴν . . . ἀφίκοντο: the ὅστε construction which we expect after τοσαύτην is thrust aside by the emphatic καὶ τοῦ τρόπου τοῦ αὐτῶν ἀπόδειξιν ἐποιή-σαντο. The whole force of the long period is thus thrown upon what is really the one emphatic thought, that this act about to be described exhibits the real character of the men. With this idea fresh in the minds of the hearers, and their attention sharpened by the interruption in the narrative, Lysias at last gives the fact for which they are waiting, in the more independent form of the clause with γάρ. — γάρ: explicative γάρ, see on 19. 12. — οὕτε πρῶτον: as soon as (for the different meaning of οὕτε τὸ πρῶτον see Crit. Note). — Μηλόβιος: Melobius was one of the party that went to Lysias’s house, drove out his guests, and put him under arrest (§§ 8 and 12).

20. ἐτυγχάνομεν: the negative imperfect of “disappointment”; see on ἐτόλμων § 5. — διὰ τὰ χρήματα: the whole preceding narrative has laid all stress upon the fact that this was outright robbery — murder for money, not a political arrest and assassination. An honorable revolution might necessitate the summary execution of some political opponents, but this act was robbery and murder. The defendant stands under the protection of the feeling that there should be a general amnesty for political offenses. Lysias is shrewdly bringing every fact to the point that Eratosthenes and his companions had used politics merely as a means for personal enrichment. If this is so, they should be treated like robbers, not like reconciled political opponents. — ὡσπέρ ἀν ἄτεροι: sc. εἴσαμάρτουν or εἰςμάρτου. HA. 905; G. 1313; B. 616. 4; Gl. 656 b (the protasis here is ἔχοντες, giving therefore ὡσπέρ ἀν for ὡσπέρ ἄν εί of the grammars). — τούτων: this treatment. — πόλει: the dative of the one “in relation to whom” οὗκ ἄξιόν is true. HA. 771; G. 1172. 1; B. 382, 2d example; Gl. 523 a, 5th example. — χορηγίας: for the nature and extent of such services see Gulick, p. 62. For the relation of metics to public burdens cp. p. 9, and see Gardner γίας χορηγήσαντις, πολλάς δ’ εἰσφορᾶς εἰσενεγκόντας, κοσμίους δ’ ήμας αὐτοῦς παρέχοντας καὶ πάν τὸ προσ-

and Jevons, Greek Antiquities, p. 455. Pleas for favor based on such services are a commonplace of Athenian court speeches. Lysias himself gives a notable illustration in his twenty-first speech, see on 19. 43.—χορηγήσαν-tas: in sharp antithesis to ὄντας and with this modifying ἡμᾶς above; but the series of partici-plies, starting in this construction, is so far prolonged that the feeling of their grammatical connection with the preceding is lost, and the sentence is closed with emphasis by bringing in a new independent verb, ἡξίωσαν; to the object of ἡξίωσαν the later partici-plies attach themselves by a slight anacoluthon.—εἰσφορᾶς: the εἰσφορά was a direct property tax levied upon members of the three upper property classes to meet extraordinary expenses of war.
As the Peloponnesian War steadily exhausted the ordinary revenues of the state, the εἰσφορά became a frequent and pressing burden.
—κοσμίους: by the close of the fifth century the abuses of democracy had become so notorious, and the trade of politics so corrupt, that ambition for political prominence had become cause for suspicion; yet the obligation of every citizen to take his place in the common life of the state was still a fundamental principle. Under these influences it was felt that the ideal citizen was the quiet, modest, law-abiding man, who neither sought political power nor neglected political obligations. Lysias defines the attitude of the ideal citizen in his twenty-first speech (§ 19): δύναμαι σὺν ὑμῶν, ὦ ἄνδρες δικασταί, ... μὴ μόνον τῶν δημοσίων λητουργίων μεμησθαι, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἱδίων ἑπιτηθευμάτων ἐνθυμεῖσθαι, ἣγομένους διότι γίναι διὰ τέλους τὸν πάντα χρόνον κόσ-μιον εἶναι καὶ σώφρονα καὶ μῆθα ὑφ’ ἰδιόν ἥττηθαι μὴν ὑπὸ κέρδος ἑπαρβῆναι, ἀλλὰ τοιοῦτον παρασχεῖν ἑαυτῶν ὅστε μηδένα τῶν πολιτῶν μῆτε μέμφεσθαι μῆτε δίκην τολμῆσαι προσκαλέσασθαι. I ask you, gentlemen of the jury, not only to remember my public services, but to consider my personal habits, thinking that this is the most difficult public service, to be from first to last always an orderly man, and discreet, to be neither conquered by pleasure nor carried away by gain, and to show one’s self such a man that no citizen will complain of him nor dare summon him into court. Cp.

Dem. 18. 308 ἐστι γὰρ, ἔστιν ἡσυχία δικαία καὶ συμφέρουσα τῇ tόλει, ήν οἱ πολλοί τῶν πολιτῶν ὑμείς ἀπλῶς ἀγετε there is, there is a quiet that is right and useful to the state, which you the majority of the citizens keep in sincerity.
The attitude that was thus honored in the citizen was even more to be demanded of the metic.—λυσα-μένους: causative mid. See on ἀπεγράφοντο § 8.—οὐχ ὁμοίως ... ἐπολιτεύοντο: not such metics as they were citizens. The restrained simplicity of the under-statement (Miosis) is stronger than the strongest terms could make it.

21. οὕτωι: cp. on αὕτως § 1.
The Thirty are now so definitely before the minds of the hearers that οὕτωι becomes the natural expression, and with the Thirty are associated in οὕτωι those who support Eratosthenes in this trial.
For the periodic form of the sentence see App. § 46.—εἰς τοὺς elewvsvs: the rhetorical period which is to contrast the conduct of the Thirty with that of Lysias and his family gains emphasis by having its opening colon in verbal antithesis to the last colon of the preceding series: τολλοὐς δ’ Ἀθη-ναίων ἐκ τῶν πολεμίων λυσαμένους

νσ. τολλοῦς μὲν τῶν πολιτῶν eis toûs polëmiôus eë getPathësan. — ἀτίμους: the technical term for men under ἀτύμια, the complete or partial deprivation of privileges of citizenship, inflicted by the courts as a penalty for crime. See Gulick, p. 61.—θυγατέρας: the dowry was so important in marriages of well-to-do Athenians that the seizure of the fathers’ property by the Thirty destroyed the hopes of marriage for many girls of good family. The lot of the Athenian wife was narrow and poor enough; to the unmarried woman no respectable career was open.—ἐκώλυσαν: every verb in the series of aorists ἐξῆλασαν ... ἐποίησαν ... κατέστησαν ... ἐκωλυσαν expresses a ‘repeated past action’; the study of such a series will help to correct the notion that the aorist is confined to ‘single’ or ‘simple’ actions. These ‘complexive’ aorists (GS. 243) sum up the whole career of the Thirty. On the ὁμοιότελευτον see App. § 57. 4.

22. κακόν, αἰσχρόν: on the συννοννία see App. § 58. 2. — εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν: when any aspect of a past action brings it up into immediate relation to the present, the whole idea of past action in present relation is usually expressed by the perfect. In the case of passive forms, the resulting condition is the usual present aspect which causes the perfect to be used; in the case of active and deponent verbs among the most common aspects are credit, guilt, responsibility; εἰργάσαντο they did the deed; εἰργασμένοι εἰσί they have done the deed, with the underlying idea in Greek as in English, they are responsible for the deed, they are guilty of the deed. Cp. πέπρακται § 7, εἰργασμένοι § 33, πεποιήκασιν § 89, καταψηφισμένους ἔστεσθαι § 100. — ἐβουλόμην ἂν: imperf. indic. of a hopeless wish (= vellem), GS. 367 (cp. 398); B. 588 n.; Gl. 461 d. The “potential indic.” of G. 1339 and GMT. 246.

23. τοιαῦτα: i.e. ὃς οὖν ἔχει κακόν ... εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν. — ὑπάρχει: In our eight speeches note the following uses of ὑπάρχει: A. In the original sense, to begin, 24. 18 τοὺς ὑπάρχαντας those who began it. B. Of what exists, or is true; fact in distinction from claim or falsehood, 12. 1, 12. 23, 12. 70, 34. 6. C. Of what exists or is true to start with, 12. 97, 19. 29, 25. 6, 34. 3; 34. 8. D. Of what is now so sure that it is to be counted ὑπόν (whether for good or ill), 12. 13, 19. 11, 19. 20, 25. 4. E. Of what is ready, 12. 72. F. τὰ ὑπάρχοντα = property (= what one has to start with), 31. 18 τοὺς ἀφηρέτο τὰ ὑπάρχοντα these he robbed of their property. In 32. 28 τὰ ὑπάρχοντα = capital, in distinction from interest. — καὶ πρότερον: see on καὶ ἡμῶν 19. 2 (C).

— τῇ ἕαυτοῦ παρανομίᾳ: a personification (rare in Lysias) like that of δύναμιν § 14, and better suited to the tone of its passage.

See Introd. p. 25, n. 5. — ἐξ-ὑπηρεtῶν: serving to the end.

24. ἐρέσθαι: for the formal questioning of an opponent in court see App. § 20. — ἐπὶ ὁφε-λείᾳ: ἐπὶ with the dative properly denotes the ground of an act, that upon which it rests (cp. on 32. 17); but often the ultimate ground of an act is its purpose, hence the use of ἐπὶ with the dat.,

instead of the phrases enumerated on εἰς σωτηρίαν § 14. So ἐπὶ τῇ βλάβῃ § 48; ἐπὶ διάθεσιν § 60. In 13. 20 ground and purpose are coupled: οἷς ἐπὶ εἰσῴα τῇ ὑμετέρᾳ

ἀλλ’ ἐπὶ καταλυσεί τοῦ δήμου τοῦ ὑμετέρου not from good will to you, but for the destruction of your democracy. — διαλέγεσθαι: the ceremonial impurity of a murderer was so great that the accused was,

after indictment, forbidden entrance to the sanctuaries or the Agora while awaiting trial. The trial itself was held in the open air, in order, as Antiphon tells us

(5. 11), “that the jurors might not come into the same inclosure with those whose hands were defiled, nor the prosecutor come under the same roof with the murderer.” —

25. ἐποίουν: I was doing. When the motive of an act is the chief object of thought, the act itself is naturally viewed in its progress, hence the change from the aor. ἀπήγαγες to (dediws) ἐποίουν. Cp. §§ 26, 27, 90; 19. 59, 22. 3, 22. 11, 22. 12, 25. 13. The following imperfects (ἐγύγνυστο, συνηγόρευες, ἀντέλεγες, ἀντέλεγγον) represent vividly the progress of the discussion (cp. the similar imperfects in § 8 ff.). In § 26 the motive is again the chief thought in ἀντέλεγες and συνελάμβανες. As Lysias passes to the consumption of the whole, he returns to the aorist, ἀπήγαγες, ἀπέκτεινας.

—βουλευτηρίω: for the relation of this discussion to the discussion among the Thirty by themselves, see on ἐν τοῖς τριάκοντα § 6. Under the Thirty the popular courts had been abolished and their functions transferred to the Senate, a body entirely subservient to the will of the Thirty.

26. On Lysias’s use of rhetorical questions see App. § 59. 1. — ἐθα: Lysias has ἐθα in the following uses: A. = again, secondly; but ἐπεὶ is his usual word for this. See 19. 15. B. = then, i.e. under those circumstances. See 19. 51. C. Meaning as under B, but in a question implying indignation or astonishment. With our passage compare 34. 6. — ἄντελεγέν: pres. infin. in ind. disc. representing the impf. of the direct. HA. 853 a; G. 1285. 1; B. 551; Gl. 577 a; GMT. 119; GS. 327. So εἶναι 12. 49; πράττειν 12. 63; ἔχειν 32. 20. — ἐπὶ σοι: in your power. Cp. ἐπι in § 33, 22. 17. — καλ σῶσαι... καὶ μὴ: both... and, where speaking the truth (though I deny that he is). εἴπερ gives emphasis; it is oftenest, though not always, used (A) where there is an implied denial or doubt of the truth to them, forced him to make this arrest in order to implicate him so deeply in their crimes that he could not withdraw (we have Plato’s testimony, Apol. 32 c, that they used this means to hold men who were not of their own number). Lysias replies that for such a purpose they would have sent him to arrest some one more important and conspicuous than a mere metic. That such a claim by Eratosthenes will be insincere is implied in the ironical

(pres.) ἐτύγχανε would mean who happened to be opposing. GMT. 144, 146. ἀποφαινομένος is the more common word with γνώμην. In such expressions γνώμη has become so fused with the verb that it seldom takes the article even when the opinion expressed is specifically given in the following clause; cp. 31. 6 γνώμην ἔχουσιν ὧς πάσα γῆ πατρίς αὐτοῖς ἑστιν ἐν ἧ ἄν τὰ ἐπιτίθεντα ἔχουσιν who hold the opinion that every land that feeds them is their fatherland; so Xen. Anab. 5. 5. 3 ἀπεδεικνύετο ... γνώμην ὅτι κτλ.

28. ἐπί: again, introducing the third point in the argument, as ἐπετα introduced the second.

29. αὐτής: itself, HA. 680. 3; G. 990; B. 475. 2 n.; Gl. 558. — προσετάττετο: for the assimilation of tense to that of ἥν see HA. 919 b; G. 1440; GMT. 559. — νῦν δὲ: cp. § 23. — παρὰ τοῦ ποτὲ καὶ λήψεσθε δίκην: whom in the world WILL you punish? καὶ is used as an emphatic particle in questions, implying the inability of the speaker to answer his own question, or his impatience at the circumstances that raise the question. Its only English equivalent is a peculiar emphasis. Cp. 24. 12, 24. 23. — ποτὲ: the tone given by καὶ is further strengthened by ποτὲ; the indefinite word of time gives the idea of utter loss for an answer. In English we prefer the indefinite expression of place, in the world. Cp. § 34 and 32. 12. — εἰπέρ: if it is actually going to be permitted. See on § 27. — ἐξέσται: a monitory protasis (see on § 35) made still more emphatic by the intensive -περ.

30. καὶ μὲν δὴ: in this combination μὲν has the affirmative force of its stronger form μὴν. Where the main statement or argument has been concluded the combination καὶ μὲν δὴ often introduces another, less important, but confirmatory statement. So in §§ 35, 49, 89; 22. 19, 22. 21, 25. 17. — σφῆνεν: precisely fitted to govern αὐτὸν only, but with slight extension of meaning made to govern τὰ ἐπισφησμένα also. It was possible for Eratosthenes, not finding Polemarchus at home, to pretend that he did not see him in the street, and so “keep” him safe, and at the same time “keep” the commands of the Thirty. — σφῆνεν τε: unusual position of τε, as though καὶ σφῆνεν were to follow; cp. Isae. 2. 1 βοηθεῖν τε τῷ πατρὶ καὶ ἑμαντῷ both to help my father and myself; for to help both my father and myself. — παρόν: HA. 973; G. 1569; B. 658; Gl. 591. — πάσιν: referring not only to members of the Thirty, but to many honorable citizens whom they forced to do work of this kind, and for whom some excuse might be offered; cp. on § 27.

31. ἐξάρνοις: pred. of γενέσθαι, assimilated to the dat. pronoun understood with κίνδυνος ἦν; see on λέγοντι § 1. — τῷ δὲ Ἐρατοσθένει: Lysias seldom uses the article with the names of parties to a suit. Here the antithesis to ἐκεῖνος accounts for its use. — ἔξην εἰπεῖν: he could have said (cp. παρόν, § 30). For non-use of ἂν see on εἰχὸς ἦν § 27. We have the same omission in οἷον τ' εἶναι below, and in χρὴν § 32. — ἔλεγχον, βάσανον: for the συνωνυμία see App. § 58. 2.

present tense of a course of conduct.— ἀνωμένου . . . ἡδομένου: present in form, impf. in force.
Cp. §§ 42, 50, 51, 99; 16, 5, 16. 6. See HA. 856 a; G. 1289; B. 542. 1; GMT. 140; GS. 337. Cp. on

33. τῶν λεγομένων: connect with τεκμήρια. — οὗ γάρ μόνον kτλ.: on the periodic structure see App. § 54. — ήμῖν: thrust between οὗ μόνον and παρεῖναι to throw emphasis upon the latter. Hyperbaton, the interruption of the natural order of words, arrests the attention, and thus throws emphasis sometimes upon the inserted word, sometimes upon one or both of the words that it has crowded apart. Cp. εἰςαγαν § 82;

of the Thirty was in evil contrast with the openness of proceedings in the democratic assemblies. Yet even under the democracy the Senate might hold secret sessions on special occasions. Lysias indulges in a grim pun in παρ-εἶναι, παρ' αὐτός εἶναι, even bringing in an uncommon expression for the sake of it. See App. § 58. 5. — of the states friendly to Athens had made formal proclamation excluding members of the late oligarchy from taking refuge with them. While Eleusis had been set apart as an asylum for the Thirty and their supporters, it is not unlikely that some, fearing that the democracy would not keep its promise of immunity, sought refuge in other states.

G. 1225; B. 398 n. 3.—θανάτῳ ἐξημιώσατε: in the summer of 406 the Athenian fleet under Conon was shut up in the harbor of Mytilene by the Lacedaemonians.
Desperate efforts were made for their rescue; a new fleet was hastily equipped and manned by a general call to arms. Seldom had an expedition enlisted so many citizens of every class. The new fleet met the enemy off the Arginusae islands, and, in the greatest naval battle ever fought between Greek fleets, won a glorious victory. The generals, wishing to push on in pursuit of the enemy, detailed forty-seven ships under subordinate officers to rescue the Athenian wounded from the wreckage. A sudden storm made both pursuit and rescue impossible, and more than 4000 men, probably half of them Athenian citizens, were lost. The blow fell upon so many homes in Athens that public indignation against the generals passed all bounds, and the generals were condemned to death.
Not only was the sentence in itself unjust, but it was carried by a vote against the accused in a body, in violation of the law's guaranty of a separate vote upon the case of every accused citizen.
A reaction in feeling followed, a part of the general reaction against the abuses of the democracy.
That the popular repentance was not as general or as permanent as it ought to have been is clear from the fact that now, three years after the event, Lysias dares appeal to this precedent as ground for righteous severity in the present case; he is evidently not afraid that it will be a warning to them to beware of overseverity when acting under passion. Yet he shows his consciousness that he is on dangerous ground, for he takes pains to state the defense of the of their children would not be sufficient punishment for them. No one ever seriously proposed at Athens to put sons to death for their fathers’ crimes, but lesser penalties were put upon them; loss of civil rights (ἀτιμία) was often visited upon the sons of a man condemned, and the common penalty of death and confiscation of property brought heavy suffering to the family (so in the case of the family for which Lysias pleads in Speech XIX). Yet even here the treatment was not inhuman; Demosthenes says (27.65), “Even when you condemn any one, you do not take away everything, but you are merciful to wife or children, and leave some part for them.”

37. τοῖνυν: force, see on 16. 7. —ἡξίον κτλ.: ἢξίον ἵνα ἱκανὰ εἶναι τὰ κατηγορημένα would mean, the charges ought to be sufficient; but in order to add to this the idea

For non-use of ἄν see on εἴκος ἦν § 27.—τῷ φεύγοντι: dat. of agent with εἰργάσθαι. —ταύτην: the neut. pronoun is assimilated in gender to its predicate appositive (δίκην) as always in Lysias. the reason for the statement above, οὐ προσῆκει; for tell him to show is here only a more emphatic way of saying, “for he could not show.”
— ὁρούς: for the number see note on § 17.— ναῦς ὁποὺ: the first ὁποὺ had its natural place at the beginning of its clause, but the second ὁποὺ and the corresponding ἤρνων of the third question are displaced to give emphasis of position to ναῦς and πόλιν.— παρέδοσαν: though the ships were all lost before the establishment of the Thirty, the oligarchical leaders were commonly charged with having betrayed the fleet at Aegospotami (cp. on § 36), and were held responsible for the terms of the final surrender, which included the surrender of all but twelve of the war-ships that remained (Xen. Hell. 2, 2. 20, Andoc.
3. 12).— οἶκων: the use of this relative adjective where the English has only ‘as’ enables the Greek to use a more compact expression.
40. ἀλλὰ γὰρ κτλ.: but in fact they seized so many arms of the enemy (and only so many) as they took from you; they captured such walls (and only such) as the walls of their country, which they dismantled; i.e. you, their fellow-citizens, are the only enemy that they ever faced.— ἀλλὰ γὰρ: see

41 Πολλακας οδη γεωμασα της τολμης των λεγοντων

ΗΑ. 1050. 4 d; Gl. 672 d. In άλλα γαρ the original confirmatory force of γαρ is preserved (see on 19. 12); it is not for, but surely, certainly, in fact. It is often better left untranslated in English. We are not to assume an ellipsis and γαρ in the causal sense but this is so, for. An emphatic but is natural in closing the discussion of a point; άλλα γαρ is often so used. Cp. § 99; 22. 11, 24. 14, 24. 21, 25. 17, 34. 10.— υμων: possess. gen. in the series υμετεραν ... των πολεμιων ... υμων ... της έαντων πατριδος.— αφειλοντο: for the seizure of the arms of all citizens outside the 3000 supporters of the Thirty, see Xen. Hell. 2. 3. 20. This meant more than the crippling of the power of the people to resist. It was a keen personal affront to every man, for the lance and shield of the Athenian hoplite were an outward sign of his political and social rank. Lycurgus speaks of them (76) as 'ερα οπλα. The seizure of these arms, which many of the citizens had carried through all the years of the Peloponnesian War, was one of the most outrageous acts of the Thirty.

—οιτινες: the simple relative οι is replaced by the indefinite rel. in a characterizing clause. ος specifies; οσπερ specifies and identifies, laying stress upon the identity (cp. 22. 15, 24. 21, 25. 20, 25. 22, 25. 31, 32. 15, 34. 1, 34. 5); while οστις often characterizes, = the sort of man who. “With οστις you relegate the man to the class of people who do that sort of thing; with ος γε you have in mind only the man himself and his deed” (Forman, Selections from Plato, p. 450). Cp. § 84, 25. 17, 25. 18, 25. 23.—φρονιμα: we have no other knowledge of this treacherous recall of frontier garrisons.

41. έθαυμασα ... οταν ένθυμηθω: for the tense of έθαυμασα see on καταςτην § 3. As the aor. expresses here a repeated action it properly stands as apodosis of the general protasis οταν ένθυμηθω.
υπέρ αυτοῦ, πλήν ὅταν ἐνθυμηθῶ ὅτι τῶν αυτῶν ἔστιν

42. τῷ ύμετέρῳ πλήθει: the common term for the democratic body of citizens in distinction from the oligarchical faction. — ἐπί:

here to be taken broadly, including the months of preparation. — τῶν τετρακοσίων: see Introd. p. 35.

verb ἐφευγεν. See on ἀνωμένον § 32. — ἐφευγεν: imperf. of the beginning of the flight (see on ἐβάδιζον § 8), the end of which is expressed by ἀφικόμενος. We must conclude that while the leaders of the movement were working at Athens and among the allied cities (Thuc. 8. 64. 1), Eratosthenes was cooperating with them in the fleet on the Hellespont, which had headquarters at Sestos. — καταλιπών: and so guilty of desertion, for the trierarch was required to serve in person as commander of his ship (for some exceptions see on 19. 62). — Ἰατροκρατίας ἔτι οὖσης, οὖν τῆς ὁστάσεως ἢρξαν, πέντε ἄνδρες ἑφοροὶ κατέστησαν ὑπὸ τῶν καλομενῶν ἑταῖρων, συναγωγεῖς μὲν τῶν πολιτῶν, ἄρχοντες δὲ τῶν συναμμοτῶν, ἐναντία δὲ τῷ ὑμετέρῳ πλήθει πράττοντες. οὖν Ἀρατοσθένης καὶ Κριτίας ἦσαν. οὔτοι δὲ

— ἡ ναυμαχία: the addition of ἡ συμφορά makes clear what battle is meant. Lysias elsewhere calls it ἡ τελευταία ναυμαχία (18. 4, 21. 9), ἡ ναυμαχία ἦ ἐν Ἑλλησπόντῳ (19. 16), ἦ ἐν Ἑλλησπόντῳ συμφορά (16. 4). — οὖν: the antecedent of οὖν is here, as often with οὖν, the whole following clause. Here this position serves the periodic form by avoiding any interruption in the close succession: πέντε ἄνδρες ἑφοροὶ κατέστησαν . . . | συναγωγεῖς μὲν τῶν πολιτῶν ἀρχοντες δὲ τῶν συναμμοτῶν | ἐναντία δὲ . . . πράττοντες.

— ἑφοροὶ: a central committee, in control of the political machine. As the leaders of the pro-Spartan party, they were well named after the Spartan Ephors. The steps recounted here were the preliminary, secret steps taken to organize the anti-democratic citizens, preparatory to the open attempt to set aside again the democratic constitution. The organization was effected through the league of secret oligarchical clubs, έταυρείαι; see Introd. p. 37. — κατέστησαν: the passive force of this intrans. act. form justifies the agent construction with ὑπὸ; cp. the trans. κατέστησαν § 21. — Κριτίας: the secret oligarchical clubs had played a large part in the revolution of 411 b.c., and had probably continued after the overthrow of the Four Hundred. When Lysander received the surrender of the city (April, 404), former members and supporters of the Four Hundred who had been in exile entered the city with him; among these was Critias. It is probable that it was these returned exiles, who felt themselves unsafe under the democracy, who put new energy into the “clubs” and organized their new central committee (ἑφοροὶ). The fact that it was not one of their faction, but Theramenes, to whom were intrusted the final negotiations with Sparta as to terms of surrender, confirms the supposition that their activity was after the surrender and the return of the oligarchical exiles. Lysias chooses here to represent it as before the surrender, in order to give the impression that Eratosthenes sought his own safety in the fall of the city (cp. §§ 44–45). We cannot determine whether Lysias is right in charging Eratosthenes with having been one of the ἐφοροί. He does not claim to have any proof except what his witnesses swear they have heard Eratosthenes say. The probability is against Lysias’s claim, for Eratosthenes was certainly the close political adherent of Theramenes, and Theramenes did not belong to the inner faction of the ἐταιρεία (see the explicit statement of Arist. Resp. Ath. 34. 3, confirmed by Lys. 12. 76). It is very strange, moreover, that if Eratosthenes was so prominent in the first stage of the movement, we have no mention of any activity on his part in the accounts given by Xenophon and Aristotle.

44. φυλάρχους, φυλάς: the ten phylae were the first political subdivisions of the citizen body. These φυλάρχοι were well planned as ‘district leaders’ to pass the orders of the five chiefs on to the club members in their several phylae. The name φυλάρχοι is borrowed from that of the commanders of the cavalry, the favorite military department in aristocratic circles. — παρηγγέλλον: Lysias purposely uses the common term for passing the orders of a military commander down the line. — Ψηφιεῖσθε: mood, HA. 885 a; G. 1372; B. 593; Gl. 638 a.

45. πραττόντων: sc. ὑμῶν. HA. 972 a; G. 1568; B. 657 n. 1; Gl. 590 a. — τῶν παρόντων κακῶν: the hearers would naturally understand this as referring to the hard pressure of famine before the surrender; see on Κριτίας § 43.
46 ἐνθυμήσεσθαι. οὐ τούν τῶν ἐφόρων ἐγένετο, μάρτυρας ὑμῖν παρέξομαι, οὐ τοὺς τότε συμπράττοντας (οὔ γάρ ἂν δυναίμην), ἀλλὰ τοὺς αὐτὸν Ἐρατοσθένους ἀκούσατε. 47. τοὺς ὥρκους: they would not, if they were wise, hold inviolable the initiation oaths of their political clubs, while lightly violating the oath of loyalty which they had taken as Ephebi entering on citizenship. τοὺς ὥρκους includes both oaths. The construction is — εἰ ἑσωφρόνων

οὐκ ἂν (ἐπὶ μὲν . . . ἐνόμιζον) (ἐπὶ δὲ . . . παρέβαινον

The English construction would put “would not” with only one of the clauses, and express the other by “while” with a participle. The Greek gives the sharper antithesis and so expresses the thought more precisely. — πρὸς: see on 32. 19, Crit. Note. — μὲν οὖν: force, see on 12. 3 (C). — κάλει: addressed to the court crier (κήρυξ). — ἀνάβητε: i.e. to the platform, to acknowledge their written testimony. (See App. § 20.)

48. ἀκηκόατε: the testimony is before you. As commonly with the perfect the emphasis is not on the past action (the hearing), but on the present result. — τὴν ἀρχὴν: Wilamowitz (Arist. u. Athen. II. 219) calls attention to this expression as supporting the theory that Eratosthenes is undergoing δοκιμασία for his office, not being tried for murder (cp. Introd.

All the more, of course, the attempts to find a legal excuse for these accused before the House, and, in the more serious cases, before the Ecclesia or a law court which had final jurisdiction. Under the Thirty the accused lost these privileges of defense. — BÁTRAÇOS: one of the most notorious of the informers; although protected from legal prosecution under the terms of the amnesty, he did not venture to return to Athens ([Lys.] 6.45). Of Aeschylides we know only that Lysias selects him as a worthy mate for Batrachus. — elen . . . μηνύουσιν: the choice between opt. of ind. disc. and the mood of the direct depends so entirely on the momentary feeling of the speaker that it is not strange that as Lysias proceeds to give the details of what Eراتosthenes should have said, he passes over to the mood of the direct discourse; see GMT. 670. — συγκείμαινα: used as pass. of συντίθημι, here in its bad sense, concocted. — ἐπι: force, see on § 24.
49. καὶ μὲν δὴ: force, see on § 30. — σιωπῶντες: Eratosthenes cannot claim that silence in this crisis showed disapproval; such men “were none the worse off for their silence,” for there were other conspirators whose function it was to speak and act, and the silent men shared their evil gains. Outspoken opposition was the only proof of patriotism in those times. — ὅν οὐχ κτλ.: than which no greater evils could have come to the city. The case of ὅν is governed by μεῖξω; its antecedent is the omitted object of λέγοντες and πράττοντες. — εἶναι: tense, see on ἀντιλέγειν § 26. — ἀποτρέποντες: conative present. See on πυνθάνοντας § 2.

50. ὅπως . . . φανήσεται: a colloquial expression of warning, HA. 886; G. 1352; B. 583 n. 3; Gl. 638. b.; GMT. 271. — τοῖνυν: force, see on 16. 7 (A). — ἐν τῷ λόγῳ: in his speech. Lysias foresees that Eratosthenes will lay great stress upon the fact that he belonged to the faction of Theramenes, the man who lost his life in trying to check the abuses of Critias and the extreme oligarchs. Eratosthenes will certainly claim that he joined Theramenes in opposing the crimes of his colleagues. Lysias shrewdly tries to forestall this plea by claiming that if Eratosthenes was strong enough ever to oppose, his failure to oppose in cases like those just mentioned in § 48 must have been due to his approval of what was being done. — ἐναντιούμενος: tense, see on ἀντιμιμένου § 32. — εἰ δὲ μή: otherwise; the expression became a formula, not necessarily negative. — ἐνταυθοί: the -τι is the locative ending, as in οἴκου, πέδου; so

51. παραστήσω: this verb, introduced in a parenthetical clause, becomes for the remainder of the sentence the governing verb, throwing γιγνομένας out of the indic. (it should be coördinate with ἐνόμιζεν) into the partic. of ind. disc.—πρὸς: see on 32. 19, Crit. Note.—γιγνομένας: tense, see on ἀνωμένου § 32.—ὁπότεροι: which faction, that of Theramenes or that of Critias. Isocrates, writing a quarter of a century after the events discussed here, contrasts the spirit of the parties of later times with that of the parties in the time of the Persian wars. He says of the men of the earlier time (4. 79): ὅτι δὲ πολιτικῆς εἶχον, ὡστε καὶ τὰς στάσεις ἐποιοῦντο πρὸς ἀλλήλους, οὖν ὁπότεροι τοὺς ἐτέρους ἀπολέσαντες τῶν λοιπῶν ἀρέσοντο, ἀλλ’ ὁπότεροι φθόγγον τὴν πόλιν ἀγαθὸν τι ποιήσαντες καὶ τὰς ἐταιρείας συνήγον οὐχ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἱδία συμφερόντων ἀλλ’ ἐπ’ τῇ τοῦ πλῆθους ὕφελεία they were so public spirited that even their party struggles were not to see which party could destroy the other and rule the rest, but which could be the first to do the state some service. And their secret clubs they formed, not for their private interests, but for the service of the state. Isocrates found warrant for this view in Herodotus, who represents Aristides as beginning his night interview with his party op-

53 Ἐπειδὴ δὲ εἰς τὸν Πειραιᾶ ἦλθομεν καὶ αἱ ταραχαὶ γεγονότει σαυτοῦ καὶ περὶ τῶν διαλλαγῶν οἱ λόγοι ponent, Themistocles, before the battle of Salamis with these words (8. 79): ἡμέας στασιάζειν χρεόν ἐστι εἰ εἰ πεῖ άλλῳ καρῷ καὶ δῆ καὶ εἰ τῷ περὶ τοῦ οἰκότερον ἡμέων πλέω ἁγαθὰ τὴν πατρίδα ἑργάσεσθαι. Now, if ever, we must vie one with the other to see which one of us will do his country the greater service.

52. κάλλιον ἦν: for non-use of ἐν see on εἰκὸς ἦν § 27.—Φυλῆν: for the event see Chron. App. Phyle lay high up on the pass across Mt. Parnes (hence τοὺς ἐπὶ Φυλῆ).—Σαλαμίνα καὶ Ἐλευσίναδε: see Chron. App., and the full account of the arrest of the Eleusinians given by Xenophon, who was probably one of the cavalry who executed it (Hell. 2. 4. 8–10).—μιὰ ψήφῳ: these were Athenian citizens, entitled each to a separate verdict in any trial; cp. on § 36.

53. ἦλθομεν: Lysias implies that he himself was with the exiles (see Introd. p. 20). He would be safe in returning from Megara as soon as Thrasybulus seized Munychia.—ταραχαὶ: in speaking to a jury made up of men from both sides, Lysias wisely uses a mild term for events which included months of armed hostility and one desperate battle, in which the leader of the Thirty was killed.—οἱ λόγοι: immediately after the battle at the Piraeus there was friendly conference between the troops while under truce for burying the dead. Xenophon (Hell. 2. 4. 20 ff.) gives the earnest appeal of one of the exiles. But the more formal negotiations began after the arrival of the Spartan king, Pausanias.—ἐπειδὴ ἦλθομεν . . . γεγονότει σαυτοῦ . . . ἐγεγονότο: this combination of tenses is noteworthy (GS. 264): after our arrival . . . after the completion . . . during the discussions. ἐπειδῇ usually takes the aor., forming the equivalent of the Eng. plup.; when it has the plup., it is to lay stress upon the completion of the action (as here) or upon its abiding result; with the imperf. it represents the action as under way. — ἑκάτεροι . . . ἐχομεν: definite recognition of the fact that on the jury are members of both parties. — ἔδειξαν: the text is uncertain (see Crit. Note), but the change to the third person is not strange, as the division into the two parties immediately follows. The exiles showed their hope of reconciliation by letting the vanquished return unmolested to the city; the city party showed their like hope by deposing their war leaders. — κρείττους: another intentionally mild term for the victors in a hard battle.

54. ἐξέβαλον: the Thirty were probably not formally banished; but, deposed from office, only the least compromised among them could safely remain, as the peace party was apparently coming into control. Cp. Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 23 f. καὶ τὸ τελευταῖον ἐφφησαντο ἐκείνους μὲν καταπάυσαν, ἄλλους δὲ ἐλέσθαι. καὶ εἶλοντο δέκα, ἕνα ἀπὸ φυλῆς. καὶ οἱ μὲν τριάκοντα Ἐλευσινάδε ἀπῆλθον And finally they voted to depose them and elect others. And they elected ten, one from each phyle. And the Thirty went to Eleusis; Arist. Resp. Ath. 38. Ι τοὺς μὲν τριάκοντα κατέλυ-

μον κατάλυσαν They deposed the Thirty, and they elect ten citizens, with full power, to put a stop to the war. — Ἑρατοσθένους: Eratosthenes was not one of the new board. The fact that he dared to remain in the city is a strong argu-

μισεῖσθαι, φιλεῖσθαι: on the rhetorical form see App. § 57. 3.

55. Ἐπιχάρης ὁ Λαμπτρεύς: Andocides describes an Epichares as a sycophant under the democracy, a tool of the Thirty, and a member of the Senate under them (Andoc. i. 95, 99). — Χαρικλεῖ: Xenophon (Mem. i. 2. 31) and Aristotle (Pol. 1305b 25) speak of him as a leader of the extreme faction. — τῇ ἐκείνων ἑταρείᾳ: the “club” element formed only a part of the Thirty. There was a large conservative element in the city who were dismayed at seeing the radicals with Critias in control; they now took the lead, but were again disappointed in that the new board of Ten fell under control of men who were in full sympathy with the Thirty at Eleusis, actively coöperated with them, and continued their war policy. It was an instance, not infrequent in modern times, of the better element in a city rising up under a sudden impulse and apparently overthrowing a political machine, only to find the machine still in control after the excitement was over. — στάσιν καὶ πόλεμον: on the συννομία see App. § 58. 2. — ἐπί: see on πρὸς 32. 19, Crit. Note.

56. ἑστασίαζον, ἐλύσουν: progressive imperfects of acts previous to ἑπεδεῖξαντο. The simple Eng. plup. secures the expression of the preliminary time (not expressed in the Greek) at the sacrifice of the expression of the progressive quality of the act; but the Eng. forms “had been quarreling,” “had been troubling” combine both ideas.

57. τοῖς τε τριάκοντα: here, as in the statement that the city party
"expelled " the Thirty, Lysias exaggerates. The Ten, so far from making war on the Thirty at Eleusis, joined them in asking help from Sparta against the dem-crats. In answer to their common request, Lysander came up to Eleusis and there raised a mercenary force, directly protecting the Thirty. Xenophon says (Hill.
2. 4. 29), οἱ δ’ ἐν τῷ ἀστεὶ πάλιν αὐ μέγα ἐφρόνουν ἕπι τῷ Λυσάνδρῳ the city party were again greatly encouraged by Lysander’s action.
Indeed, Lysias himself ascribes to Phidon the securing of this very force which Lysander organized ὑμεῖς: the democratic exiles. So large a portion of the jury were of the party of the Piraeus that Lysias speaks as though all were.

The other element in the jury were ccluded among the ‘patriots.’ —

passive of ἐξέβαλον (§ 54), HA.
820; G. 1241; B. 513; Gl. 499 a.

58. ὑργίζεσθαι ὅτι: see on § 80. — διαλλάξαι: a true dative infinitive, HA. 951; G. 1532; B.
640; Gl. 565. — καταγαγεῖν: again he speaks as though all the jury were of the Piraeus party. — τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ: i.e. the same as that of Eratosthenes. — τοὺς μὲν κρί-tτους: their colleagues among the Thirty. — δὲ ὑμᾶς: through your means. For διὰ with acc. see on § 87. The Thirty were deposed by the city party, but it was in the interest of reconciliation, and so it was done “thanks to” the exiles. The speaker strains the facts for the sake of his neat antithesis: δὲ ὑμᾶς κακῶς ποιεῖν ἔτοιμος ἦν, ὑμῖν δὲ ... ἀποδοῦναι τὴν πόλιν. — ἐπείθεν: conative impf. HA. 832; G. 1255; B. 527; Gl. 459 a; GMT. 36; GS. 213. Cp. 19. 22. — Βοιωτῶν: the exiles gathered at Thebes before they seized Phyle, and were hospitably received there. 59. εἶτε καὶ ... εἶτε καὶ: the correlation of the two clauses is emphasized by adding καὶ ... καὶ to εἶτε ... εἶτε. — ἱερῶν: an allusion to the well-known superstition of the Spartans. Lysias may have in mind the Carnean festival (Aug.-Sept.), which made the Spartans too late for the glories of Marathon (Herod. 6. 106). — αὐτῶν: intensive. — εὐνοοῦστατον, κακονοῦστατον: on the παρονομασία see App. § 58. 5.

60. μισθωσάμενοι: the mercenary force raised by Lysander at Eleusis; it supported the Thirty as much as the Ten; Lysias chooses to misrepresent their relation. Cp. on § 57. — ἐπ’ ὀλέθρῳ: a substantive purpose construction. See on § 24. — πόλεις ὅλας: a great exaggeration. The only “cities” which sent out troops were those which later joined Pausanias, and these are included in τῶν συμμάχων of the next line. — οὐ διαλλάξαι: inserted to keep the jury intent upon the central thought that in all this Phidon and Eratosthenes were betraying their trust and belying their own professions. Note that while the infin. (not in ind. disc.) regularly takes μή, a negated infin. standing in parenthetical antithesis takes οὖ.—εἰ μὴ δὴ ἀνδρας ἀγαθοὺς: but for good men. For διὰ with acc. see on § 87. εἰ μὴ διὰ became a fixed formula, like Eng. “but for” (cp. on εἰ δὲ μὴ § 50). The phrase throws its force back upon ἀπολέσαι only (not upon παρεσκευάζοντο). There underlies it the thought that the action ἀπολέσαι did not come to pass, and it states whom we have to thank for it, HA. 905. 2; G. 1414. 1; B. 616. 2; Gl. 656 a. The “good men” to whom, above all others, the exiles owed their rescue from an apparently hopeless situation were the Spartan king, Pausanias, and others of the anti-Lysander faction in Sparta. Lysias shrewdly hints to the jury that in punishing the men who were responsible for Lysander’s efforts at Eleusis in support of the Thirty and the Ten, they will please the present Spartan administration.—οἷς οὖς ἰδείως: the Eng. requires “must” in place of the simpler Greek imperative in a relative clause; cp. ὀστε with the impv., 16. 8 N. —ἐκεῖνοις: the “good men.”

61. οὐκ οἶδ’ ὅ τι: see on § 37 and Crit. Note.—δέομαι ἀναπαύσασθαι: hardly the real reason; he had ‘rested’ a few moments before (§§ 42, 47); but by seeming indifferent to the testimony, he gives to his statements an air of certainty as needing no proof. In fact, he knows that they are full of exaggeration. What his witnesses proved we cannot say: certainly not that Eratosthenes was responsible for the policy of Phidon and the Ten.

A more common construction is that of Dem. 25. 12 φοβοῦμαι μὴ τὸ πράγμα εἰς τούπαντίον περιέστηκεν. — τούπαντιον ἦ ὡς: ἐναντίον is treated as a comparative, and may be followed (1) by ἦ, (2) by the less common comparative connective ἦ ὡς, or (3) by the gen. without ἦ. (1) § 2, τούπαντιον ... ἦ ἐν τῷ πρὸ τοῦ χρόνῳ (2) Herod. 1. 22 ἣκου τοῦ κήρυκος ... τοὺς ἐναντίους λόγους ἦ ὡς αἰτός κατε-δόκεε he heard from the herald words the opposite of what he had expected. 65. αἰτιώτατος: Thucydides says (8. 68). that Antiphon was the moving spirit in planning the revolution of 411 B.C., that Pisan-der was the most prominent man in its execution, and Phrynichus the most daring; but he adds, καὶ Θηραμένης ὁ τοῦ Ἀγνωνος ἐν τοῖς ἐν γεγκαταλύσιν τὸν ἠμοῦ πρῶτος ἦν, ἀνήρ οὔτε εἰπέν οὔτε γγώνα αἵδινατος and Theramines, the son of Hagnon, was a prime mover in the abolition of the democracy, a man not without ability as a speaker and thinker. Aristotle says (Resp. Ath. 32. 2) ἢ μὲν οὖν ὀλιγαρχία τούτου κατέστη τῶν τρό-των, ... αἴτιων μάλιστα γενο-and Antiphon and Theramenes, men of good birth and of eminent reputation for ability and judgment. Lysias exaggerates somewhat by failing to mention the two who shared the leadership with Theramenes, but he charges Theramenes with little more than do Thucydides and Aristotle, who are friendly to him.—ἐπὶ τῶν

Membership in this board was an honor, in view of the emergency which the προβούλων were elected to meet. Some of them, like Hagnon, actively favored the change in government; others assented to it reluctantly, as being the only possible course. Aristotle’s Rhetoric (3. 18) preserves an anecdote of Sophocles (probably the poet) which illustrates the attitude of men of this second class: Σοφοκλῆς ἐρωτῶμενος ὑπὸ

he, like the other Probouloi, approved of the establishment of the Four Hundred, said, “Yes.” “But what? Did that not seem to you a bad business?” “Yes,” said he. “Then did you take part in that ‘bad business’?” “Yes,” said he, “for there was nothing better to do.” —τοῖς πράγμασι: to the government; see on 16. 3.—ὑπ’ ἀυτῶν: i.e. τῶν tετρακοσίων.

66. τῇ πολιτείᾳ: to the administration.—ἐπειδῆ: for ἐπειδῆ with imperf, see on ἐγίγνοντο, § 53.
—Κάλλαιος: his son Critias became the head of the second oligarchy seven years later.—οὔ·κέτι: the people had been persuaded to accept the new form of government in the hope of ending the war through Alcibiades with Persian support; this hope had now failed, Introd. p. 36. — ἥδη: strengthening τότε, then, and not till then. So in 25. 22.—τε: for position see on § 30.—τὸν πρὸς ἑκείνους φθόνον . . . τὸ παρ' ὑμῶν δέος: the active emotion, envy, takes πρὸς with accus. of the object toward which the envy is directed; the passive emotion, fear, takes παρά with the gen. of the source from which the emotion springs. The objective gen. is oftener used with δέος, but the prepositional phrase is more explicit and stands in better parallelism with πρὸς ἑκείνους. — μετέσχε: ingressive aorist (see on μετέσχε, 16. 3); cp. the imperf. in §§ 58 and 62.—Ἀριστοκράτους: a man of prominent family, who had done the city good service during the war. He was put to death in 406 B.C. with other generals after the battle of Arginusae. His association with Theramenes in deposing the Four Hundred is confirmed by Aristotle, Resp. Ath. 33. 2 αἰτιώτατοι δ' ἐγένοντο τῆς καταλύσεως Ἀριστοκράτης καὶ Ὑθραμένης. So Thuc. 8. 89. 2.

67. τῷ ύμετέρῳ πλήθει: cp. § 66 and see on § 42.—Ἀντιφώντα: see on § 65.—Ἀρχεπτόλεμον: he had worked for peace with Sparta earlier in the war (Ar. Equ. 794). After the deposition of the Four Hundred, Antiphon and Archeptolemus were put to death on the charge of having plotted with others of the oligarchs to betray the city to Sparta. Theramenes was at the head of the government, under a moderate constitution, from September, 411, to about July, 410 (see Introd. p. 55).
68. The following events belong to the time (404 B.C.) after the complete restoration of the democracy, when the administration had passed from Theramenes and the moderate aristocrats into the hands of Cleophon and other popular leaders. Under their mismanagement came the disaster at Aegospotami, the siege of the city, and the unsuccessful attempts to obtain from Sparta moderate terms of peace. In that crisis Theramenes came forward and offered to go to Lysander (see Introd. p. 37).—αυτός: of his own accord. Greatly strengthened by repetition (ἐπαναφορά, App. § 57. 5) with ἀπώλεσε.—μέγα, πολλοῦ ἄξιον: on the συνωνυμία, see App. § 58. 2.—ὑπέσχετο δὲ: after a general statement (here φάσκων . . . ἡφρικέναι) the particular explanation is often introduced by a neutral δὲ, which has lost all adversative force. The English, and usually the Greek, more logically uses “for,” as giving the grounds for the general statement. Cp. on γάρ explicative, 19. 12.—ὑπέσχετο: Xenophon says (Hell. 2. 2. 14 ff.) that the Spartans had already announced the destruction of ten stadia of the Long Walls as a condition of peace, and that what Theramenes offered to do was to find out from Lysander whether this was intended as a preliminary to the enslavement of the city, or only as a means of guaranteeing their faithful obedience to the other terms of peace. After remaining three months with Lysander he returned to Athens with the report that Lysander had no power in the matter, and that it must be determined by the government at Sparta. Theramenes was then sent to Sparta with nine others to negotiate peace. Lysias represents all this as one mission, and as the work of Theramenes alone; the whole impression given is purposely misleading.—μήτε, μήτε: μή instead of οὖ with the participles because they depend on ποιήσεως, which, if negativted, would take μή. HA. 102.4 (last line); G. 1496; B. 549. 2. A

70 δὲ δὲν μὲν ὑπέσχετο οὐδὲν ἐπραξεν, οὕτως δὲ ἐνετεθύμητο ὡς ἡμὶ μικρῶν καὶ ἀσθενή γενέσθαι τῆν πόλιν, participle takes μή (A) when it is equivalent to a protasis (this includes “generic” expressions, see on 25. 1). So in 12. 85, 19. 29, 19. 53, 25. 34. (B) when it depends on a verb which has μή or would have it if negatived. So in 19. 33, 19. 37, 19. 51, 24. 18, 24. 26, 25. 4, 25. 22, 32. 18.

69. πραττοῦσις μὲν . . . βουλῆς ἀντιλεγόντων δὲ πολλῶν εἰδότες δὲ ὅτι οἱ μὲν ἄλλοι . . . ὑμεῖς . . . ἐπετρέψατε.

The use of μὲν . . . δὲ . . . δὲ is due to the fact that while εἰδότες is not correlative in form with the two other participles, it is in thought. We find similar construction in 19. 23, 19. 26, 25. 31. — σωτηρία: we have no other knowledge of these measures. Ordinarily the Areopagus had no jurisdiction in political or military affairs, but this crisis was so extreme, involving the very existence of the city, that extraordinary action by the Areopagus is not unlikely. — ἀντιλεγόντων: see Introd. p. 37. — τάπόρρητα ποιοῦνται: keep state secrets. — αὐτῷ: on the first mission, that to Lysander, Theramenes went alone, but had no authority to negotiate; on the second, he had authority, but it was shared with nine fellow-ambassadors. Lysias purposely represents it as resting entirely with him. — γυναίκας: the article is often omitted with words of family relationship (definite by their own force), especially where several are joined; cp. the Eng. omission of the possessive pronoun in the same expressions; both languages extend the construction to ‘fatherland.’

of peace openly proposed to the people and ratified by them. It is not included in the terms given by Xenophon (Hell. 2. 2. 20) and Andocides (3. 12). Aristotle (Resp. Ath. 34. 3) regards it as one of the actual conditions; so Diodorus (14. 3. 2). The expression of Lysias himself in 13. 14 οἱ τοὺς ἔννομοι μὲν εἰρήνην λεγομένην, τῷ δ' ἔργῳ τὴν δημοκρατίαν καταλυσάνθην implies that the change of government was not in the nominal terms of peace. — ἀποστερήσεσθε: voice, HA. 496; G. 1248; B. 514–15; Gl. 393. — τιμωρίαν: Lysias is claiming that Theramenes sought to destroy the independence of the city from fear that if the people should be left free to act their pleasure, they would inflict extreme punishment upon him. But punishment for what? He was under no accusation and in no danger. In the period immediately after the fall of the Four Hundred, when some of his colleagues were executed and others banished, he retained the confidence of the people and was for a time at the head of the new administration. In the years that followed (410–404), when the extreme democracy had returned to the fullest power, still no attack was made upon him. Had he been able to secure moderate terms from Sparta, he would have been the most popular man in the city.

71. ἐκκλησίαι: Lysias, having shown that Theramenes carried the proposition for surrender in the assembly on the day after his return from Sparta, turns now to the discussion of his efforts in a later assembly, called to discuss a change of government. He expects his hearers to understand by the words τὸ τελευταῖον that he is passing to this later and final act. To hearers familiar with the events, less than two years past, this was probably clear; by us the words τὴν ἐκκλησίαν are liable at first to be understood as referring to the assembly of which he has just been speaking; but six lines below he makes all clear by adding the phrase περὶ τῆς πολιτείας.

This explicit statement should acquit Lysias of the charge brought by recent critics (cp. Meyer, Gesch. des Allerthums IV. 666) that he is purposely confusing the two assemblies. — ο潏 πρῶτερον … ἕως: the ordinary construction is either οὐ πρῶτερον … πρὶν or οὐ … ἕως; here the two are combined, as in 25. 26. — ἐκεῖνον: the Spartans. — έκ Σάμου: see Chron. App. Diodorus says (14. 3. 4–5) that Lysander had just taken Samos and that he came to the Piraeus with 100 ships. But Xenophon (Hell. 2. 3. 7) says that on the surrender of Samos Lysander dissolved the Lacedaemonian fleet, and gives the impression that he sailed directly from Samos home. It is probable then that his visit to Athens was during the siege of Samos, with only a part of his fleet, and that he returned to Samos to complete the siege. — τὸ στρατόπεδον: the large Peloponnesian army which Pausanias brought up to Athens after Aegospotami, and which encamped in the Academy with Agis’s troops from Decelea, was soon dismissed, Lysander being left to carry on the winter siege with his fleet (Diodor. 13. 107. 3); but a Spartan land force probably remained to co-operate with Lysander, and even after the surrender it would naturally be retained till the Athenians had completed the stipulated destruction of their walls, the work of several months.

72. ἐπαρχόντων: force, see on ἐπάρχει § 23. — Φιλοχάρους, Μιλτιάδου: the names are Attic; we can only conjecture that they were prominent men of the oligarchical party. — ἐποίουν: tense, see on ἐβάδεζον § 8. — ῥήτωρ: the term for one who addresses the popular assembly. The ῥήτωρ may or may not have the technical training of the rhetoricians. The power possessed by one who could move the assembly tended to develop a class of professional ῥήτορες. — τε: correlative with μήτε, and used instead of a second μήτε, so that it may connect the preceding with both the negative ἐλοισθε and the positive ψηφίσασθε,

\text{ἐναντιώτο} & \quad \text{μήτε} \; \text{ῥήτωρ} \\

73. Δρακοντίδης: confirmed by Arist. Resp. Ath. 34. 3. He was appointed one of the Thirty. — ἀπέφαινεν: the word would be used properly of the publication of a scheme of government by a lawgiver, or of the 'report' of a commission appointed to frame laws; Lysias uses it with the sarcastic implication that this was not a proposition for the people to discuss, but a ready-made scheme thrust upon them. There is no real inconsistency between the statement of Lysias that Dracontides presented a form of government (πολιτείαν ἀπέφαινεν) and that of Xenophon (Hell. 2. 3. 11) that the Thirty were appointed to frame a constitution (συγγράψαι νόμους). Dracontides doubtless presented the general plan, and the Thirty were chosen to draft a constitution which should carry it out in detail. — ὡς: for the usual force of ὡς with a partic. see on 16. 8. But sometimes, as here and in § 90 and 32. 23, it gives to the partic. nearly the same force of ind. disc. which ὡς so often gives to the indic. HA. 978; G. 1593. 1; B. 661 N. 4; Gl. 594; GMT. 919. — ἐγκλησιάζετε: for the form of augment see Crit. Note. The addition of ἐν ἑκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ has led editors to the rejection of ἐγκλησιάζετε, the Mss. reading (present, normal indic. disc. construction). For the rare impf. see GMT. 674. 2; HA. 936; G. 1489. i.

74. πολλοὺς: emphatic predicate of τοῖς πράττονται. — παρασπόντοι: Diodorus (14. 3. 6) and Plutarch (Lysander 15) say that the Athenians had not completed the demolition of their walls within the appointed time. — ἔσται . . . ποιήσεθ' . . . κελεύει: for mood see Crit. Note and on ἄφθονοιν § 35.

75. γυνότε: ingressive aor., see on μετέσχον 16. 3. — αὐτοῦ: the adverb. — ὥσοντο ἀπιόντες: ὥσοντο, were gone, is more summary than ἀπῆλθον; ὥσοντο ἀπιόντες is more summary still, went straight off.
οτι ουδεν κακων τη πολει εψηφισαντο· ολιγοι δε των και πονηροι και κακως βουλευμενοι τα προσταχθεντα 76 εχειροτονησαν. παρηγγελτο γαρ αυτοις δεκα μεν ους Θηραμενης απεδειξε χειροτονησαι, δεκα δε ους οι καθεστηκοτες εφοροι κελευνεν, δεκα δε έκ των παροντων· αυτω γαρ την ημετεραν ασθενειαν εαυτων και την αυτων δυναμιν ηπιοσαντο, ωστε προτερον ειδεσαν τα μελλοντα εν τη εκκλησια πραξθησεσθαι· ταυτα δε ουκ εμοι δει πιστευσαι, άλλα έκεινη παντα γαρ τα υπ' εμοι ειρημενα εν τη βουλη απολογουμενος ελεγεν,

76. The scheme was carried out by means of the political machinery described in detail in § 44.—δεκα: it is evident that the Board of Thirty was the result of a union between the aristocratic club element represented by Critias and the moderate aristocrats led by Theramenes, with the addition of a third group to give nominal representation to the democratic masses (cp. Aristotle's explicit statement as to the two aristocratic groups, Resp. Ath. 34. 3). Theramenes was at first the strongest man in the plot because of his personal connection with Lysander. This compromise in the formation of the new administration explains the fact of the almost immediate outbreak of dissension within its own ranks. — απεδειξε . . . κελευσεν: Theramenes had doubtless designated his ten candidates before the preliminary club meetings were held; at these meetings the district leaders appear to have said to the members, naming two groups of ten men each, "Vote for these ten men whom Theramenes has designated (απεδειξε), and for the following ten whom our chiefs, the Ephors, order you (κελευσοντι) to vote for." απεδειξε remains unchanged according to the regular principle that dependent secondary tenses of the indicative do not become opt. in ind. disc., HA. 935 b, c; G. 1497. 2, 1499; B. 675. 1, 3; GMT. 689. 3, cp. 695 I, last paragraph.—εκ των παροντων: i.e. from the citizens at large; a mere pretense of representation of the popular body.

77. απολογουμενος: Xenophon (Hell. 2. 3. 35–49) gives at some length the speech of Theramenes when accused by Critias before the Senate; but it is probably Xenophon's own defense of his former party chief rather than a literal report of the speech delivered. There is in it no reference to the points which Lysias mentions here. — ὅνειδίζων, ἕνειδίζων: on the ἑπαναφορά see App. § 57. 5. — δι' αὐτῶν: they had him to thank for their return. See on § 87. — κατέλθουσιν: see note on Κρίτιας § 43. The return of the aristocrats who had been banished after the overthrow of the Four Hundred was one of the terms of the peace which Theramenes and his fellow-ambassadors negotiated with Sparta. The Spartans were probably not as indifferent to this as Lysias would have us believe. The best guaranty of the continuance of Athens under Spartan hegemony lay in the repression of the democracy. Theramenes and his friends saw in this fact their own opportunity. — ὑπ’ ἐμοῦ: emphasis is given by the variation from the normal position (cp. τὰ ὑπ’ ἐμοῦ ἐφημένα five lines above). The central point of the argument is, "Theramenes's speech agrees with my account." — πίστευς: L. & S. s.v. Π. — ἐκεῖνον: referring to the same persons as αὐτοῖς in the preceding line. When two clauses or phrases are sharply contrasted, ἐκεῖνοι often takes the place of αὐτοῖς in one of them. Cp. 14. 28 οὐχ ὡς ἀδελφὸν αὐτῆς, ἀλλ’ ὡς ἄνδρα ἐκεῖνης not as her brother, but as her husband; Plato, Euthyphro 14 d αἴτεῖν τῇ φύσι αὐτῶν καὶ διδόναι ἐκεῖνοι do you say that we ask of them (the gods) and give to them?

78. On the striking πολυσύν- δετον of the opening words see App. § 58. 4. — ὑπὲρ . . . πονηρίας: he was serving — not the people, but his own base nature’; ὑπὲρ gives a touch of personification that we should not have in ἔνεκα.

Cp. on ὑπὸ § 3.—κατέλυσε: for force of the tense see Crit. Note.
—δικαίως δὲ ἂν: ἂν in this connection marks the thought as ‘contrary to fact’ (δόντος being supplied from the preceding).
HA. 987 (b); G. 1308. 2; B. 662, 606; Gl. 595.
The thought is that had the Thirty not put Theramenes to death the restored democracy would justly have done it.
On the ἐπαναφορά of δικαίως, δικαίως see App. § 57. 5.
Cp. ὀνειδίζων, ὀνειδίζων § 77.—παρόντων . . . ἀπόντων: to despise what one has and to covet what one has not was a proverbial mark of the restless and discontented man, the man who did not submit to the decrees of the gods as fixing his lot in life, and who failed of the due measure of self-control. On the rhetorical form of the clauses see App. § 57. 3.—ὄνοματι: the name of restoration of the government to the form of the ancestral limited democracy. —δεινοτάτων: outrageous, a stronger word than αἰσχροτός, the ordinary opposite of κάλλιστος.

79. ἐκεῖνος: used rather than οὗτος, as suggesting “that time” for which they had long been hoping.—τοῦτον: note that συναρχόντων has become so fully substantivized as to take the gen. instead of the dat. proper to it as a participle. So τοῦσ συναρχόντων αὐτῶν § 87. GS. 39; HA. 966 a; B. 650 n. 1.—συναρχόντων: see Introd. p. 44, note 3.—ἔχθρων: since the amnesty the Thirty are no longer πολέμων, but in the feeling of their former victims they will always be ἔχθροι.

80. ὀργίζομαι: ὅν is assimilated to the case of the (omitted) antecedent. Cp. on § 35. Lysias’ constructions with ὀργίζομαι are the following: (A) the person against whom the anger is felt is always in the dat., 16. 17, 22. 2, 25. 1, and often. (B) The occasion of the anger is expressed by (1) gen. with ἐπί, 12. 2; (2) gen. with ἀντί, 12. 96; (3) dat. with ἐπί, 14. 13, 28. 2, 32. 21; (4) acc. with διά, 21. 9, 30. 13; (5) dat. without prep., 12. 90, 20. 1; (6) gen. without prep., 12. 80, 27. 11, 31. 11 (in the first two the gen. is connected with another gen. clause); (7) a ὅτι clause, 1. 15, 12. 58, 14. 20. — ἀποφεύ: the Thirty had withdrawn to Eleusis; the people were by no means sure that they could be safely allowed to hold that place permanently. In fact two years later Athens came to armed conflict with the aristocrats at Eleusis, and brought that city back under the Athenian government. — ἐπιβουλεύετε, ἀφήτε: the English idiom does not here allow the use of coördinate clauses corresponding to the Greek (cp. on § 47 ἐνόμιζον . . . παρέβαινον); the Greek yields the sharper antithesis. For change of mood and tense from ὀργίζομαι . . . ἐπιβουλεύετε to ἀφήτε . . . βοηθήσητε see HA. 874 a; G. 1346; B. 584; Gl. 485.

81. κατηγόρηται: § 79 marks the close of the attack on the memory of Theramenes, and § 81 the close of the attack on the career of Eratosthenes and the whole moderate party. — τοῦτο: used of one’s opponent present in court, as in § 79, Ἐρατοσθένους καὶ τῶν τοῦτον συναρχόντων. The English admits only the colorless “his” (αὐτοῦ). Cp. § 84, 24. 3, 25. 3, 25. 24, 25. 33, 34. 1, 34. 6.— φίλον: Theramenes, Phidon, and the others whom he has attacked; to be distinguished from the friends who will plead for Eratosthenes in court (τῶν συνερυθόντων); the attack upon them comes in

82. ἄδικοντας: tense, see on ἄδικω § 14. — ἀκρίτους: cp. on § 17. — ἀξιοῦτε: L. & S. s.v. III. 2. — δίκην τὴν ἄξιαν: “the substantive takes no article before it, when it would have none if the attributive were dropped,” HA. 668 a; cp. B. 452. — δίκην . . . δεδωκότες: the unusual position of words throughout gives emphasis; see on ἧμων § 33.

83. παίδας: cp. ὁν καὶ τῶν παίδας § 36. — λάβοιμεν: note the change to the first person. The jury alone could put them to death, but Lysias would share in this requital for wrongs suffered. — ὅν: the antec. is the subject of λάβοιμεν. — νείς: form, see on § 34. — ἄλλα γὰρ: emphatic γὰρ really, possibly (see on § 40); connect with καλῶς ἄν ἔχω. — τὰ φανερὰ: it is assumed that they have put all their other property out of reach. — ἦς, ὅν: possessive gen. — εἰλήφασιν: the perfect implies that they still have their ill-gotten gains in their possession.

84. τοῖνυν: force, see on 16.

Ὦν ἀμφοτέρων ἄξιον ἐπιμεληθη-ναί, ἐνθυμομένους ὅτι οὔτ’ ἂν ἐκεῖνα ἐδύναντο ποιεῖν ἡ πολιτεία καταπεφρόνηκεν: perfect to denote a permanent attitude of mind where the present would denote a present mental action (cp. καταφρονών § 78; the distinction is one of emphasis). Lysias nowhere else uses the perf. active of either of these verbs. Cp. ἑπεθύμησον § 70; Dinarch. i. 104 σὺ δ’ οὕτω σφόδρα πεπίστευκας τοῖς σεαυτῷ λόγοις καὶ καταπεφρόνηκας τῆς τούτων εὐθείας you have such confidence in your own eloquence and such contempt for the honesty of these citizens; Lycurg. 68 καὶ οὕτως ἐστὶν ἀνόητος καὶ πανταπαζών ὑμῶν καταπεφρόνηκός he is so foolish and so full of contempt for you; Isoc. 4. 136 δικαίως ἀπάντων ὑμῶν καταπεφρόνηκός.

The two halves of the double question are widely separated by the insertion of the parenthetical sentence ἐβουλόμην . . . ἀπολλύναι.

— ἐβουλόμην ἂν: cp. on § 22.

— σφέεσιν, ἀπολλύναι: conative presents, see on πυνθανοῦσαι § 2.

— δεινὸλέγειν: a common characterization of the sophists and of the rising profession of pleaders, voicing the popular suspicion of their power; cp. Plato, Ἀρισ. 17 a ἐλεγον ὡς χρῆ ὑμᾶς εὐλαβεῖσθαι μὴ ὅτ' ἐμοὶ ἐξαπατηθῆτε ὥς δεινὸν ὄντος λέγειν they said that you must be on your guard against being deceived by me, on the ground that I am an eloquent speaker.
εὐθέσεις νομίζοντες ὡμᾶς εἶναι, εἰ διὰ μὲν τοῦ ὑμετέρου πλήθους ἀδεώς ἤγονται τοὺς τριάκοντα σῶσειν, διὰ δὲ ἔρατοσθένην καὶ τοὺς συνάρχοντας αὐτοῦ δεινὸν ᾖν καὶ τῶν τεθνεῶτων ἐπὶ ἐκφορὰν ἐλθεῖν. κατοί οὖν μὲν σωθέντες πάλιν ἀν δύναντο τὴν πόλιν ἀπολέσαι· ἐκεῖνοι δὲ, οὐς οὖν ἀπώλεσαν, τελευτήσαντες τὸν βίον πέρας ἔχουσι τῆς τῶν ἐχθρῶν τιμωρίας. οὐκ οὖν δεινὸν εἰ τῶν μὲν ἀδίκως τεθνεῶτων οἱ φίλοι συναπώλλυντο, αὐτοῖς δὲ τοῖς τῆς πόλις ἀπολέσασιν — ἣν ποὺ ἔπ'

87. εὐθέσεις: for the change of this word from an originally good meaning (εὖ, ἠθός) cp. the history of Eng. simple and silly.— διὰ πλήθους, διὰ ἔρατοσθένην: note the change from gen. to accus. with διὰ. ὑπὸ with the gen. denotes the voluntary agent by whom an act is performed. διὰ with the gen. denotes the mediator (GS. 163) through whose voluntary action an effect is produced. διὰ with the acc. denotes the person through whom an effect is produced without implying that it was directly intended by him, the person thanks to whom something comes about. “When διὰ with gen. is used the agency is purposeful, when διὰ with acc. is used it is accidental” (Gildersleeve, A.J.P. XI. 372). For διὰ with gen. cp. § 92, 32. 27; διὰ with acc. §§ 58, 60, 77; 25. 6, 25. 27, 25. 29, 25. 30, 25. 32. For combination of the two see 25. 33. — πλήθους: cp. §§ 42, 66, 67. — δέ: substitute Eng. while; as in §§ 47 and 80 the Eng. idiom does not allow the coordinate clauses.— αὐτοῦ: for the case see on τοῖς § 79.

88. ‘Extreme severity against the Thirty is necessary, for they, if permitted to live, will endanger the state, whereas their severity in dishonoring the dead bodies of their victims was wanton barbarity.’ — ἔχουσι: we should expect εἶχον, but Lysias neglects precision of connection in the pressure of his feeling that vengeance for his brother and the rest can come only through the fidelity of their friends now. — ἐχθρῶν: obj. gen. — συναπώλλυντο: were in danger of dying with them, impf. of an expected action, B. 527; GS. 213. So ἐγίγνετο 25. 10, ἀπεστεροῖμην 25. 13.— ἢ ποῦ κτλ.: Lysias started to say, “Is it not then outrageous, if the friends of those who were unjustly put to death were in danger of perishing with them, while (δὲ) to the very men who destroyed the city so many are preparing to bring aid?" But instead of following out the second half of the sentence he interrupts it with a bitterly sarcastic exclamation, and from that point abandons the connection with the original principal clause, οὐκ ὅπως δὲν διενόμησιν: Aye, doubtless many will come to their funeral, when so many are preparing to bring them aid. — ἐπ’ ἐκφορὰν: a grim reminder to the defense, that there is no doubt whatever as to the coming verdict.

89. καὶ μὲν δὴ: force, see on § 30. — εἶναι: the direct discourse would have πολὺ ρᾶον ἃν . . . ἀντετείνῃ (ἐστὶ) ἀπολογήσασθαι it was much easier to accuse than (it is) to defend. For ἦν without ἄν see on εἴκος ἦν § 27. — ὑπὲρ ἄν: cp. on ὅν ἄν § 35. On ὑπὲρ see on 25. 5. — πεποιήκασιν: tense, see on εἴργασμένοι εἴσιν § 22. — τῶν ἄλλων Ἑλλήνων πλείστα: strictly it should be τῶν ἄλλων Ἑλλήνων πλείω, but such looseness of expression with the superlative is not infrequent, and is here caused by the parallelism with ἐλάχιστα τῶν τριάκοντα. — εἰς ὑμᾶς: force, see on πρὸς 32. 19, Crit. Note.

90. καταψηφιεῖσθε: monitory protasis, see on ἀφήσοντεν § 35. — ὡς: an uncommon use with δῆλος and the partic. of ind. disc. (see on § 73); cp. Xen. Anab. 1. 5. 9 δῆλος ἦν Κύρος ὡς σπείρων it was evident that Cyrus was hastening. — τοῖς πεπραγμένοις:
91 ὅτι τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν τριάκοντα προσταχθέντα ἐποιεῖτε· νυνὶ μὲν γὰρ οὕδεις ύμᾶς ἀναγκάζει παρὰ τὴν ὑμετέραν γνώμην ψηφίζεσθαι. ὥστε συμβουλεύω μὴ τούτων ἀποψηφισαμένους ύμῶν αὐτῶν καταψηφίσασθαι. μὴδ' οἷσθε κρύβδην εἶναι τὴν ψήφον· φανερὰν γὰρ τῇ πόλει τῇ ὑμετέραν γνώμην ποιήσετε.

case, see on ὀργίζοντε § 80.—προσταχθέντα: a side thrust at Eratosthenes's excuse, § 25.—ἐποιεῖτε: tense, see on ἐποίον § 25.

91. μὴ δ' οἷσθε: nor think, "The ballot is secret." The ballot of the individual juror will be secret, but the jurors are not to be influenced by that fact, for if the secret ballot acquits Eratosthenes, it will be clear that the members of the city party have so voted, and are, therefore still hostile to the democracy. The negative μὴ δ' οἷσθε does not imply the untruth of κρύβδην εἶναι, as it would in an ordinary connection.Precisely similar is the use of the negative in μηδὲν τοῦτο παραστῇ, ὡς . . . κατηγορῶ § 62.

92. καταβαίνειν: i.e. from the speaker's platform.—διὰ τούτων: force, see on διὰ πλήθους § 87.—τὴν ψήφον φέρητε: by position and construction this is the leading phrase as compared with τὰς συμφορὰς . . . ἔχοντες, but subordinate in thought. The dropping of emphasis in delivery would give to it its real subordination; it may well be made subord. in trans.: that you may have the misfortunes . . . as warnings, as you cast your vote.—ἐν δὲ: the main clause of result has the construction οὕτω . . . ὡστε, the subordinate one, τοιοῦτον ἐν δ'.

94. For the use of antithesis in this section see App. § 57. 1. — οἰκος: Xenophon sums up a discussion on the meaning of οἰκος in these words, οἰκος δ’ ἴμων ἔφαινεν ὀτερ κτήσεις ή σύμπασα. We agreed that οἰκος is the same as one’s whole property (Oeconom. 6. 4). — τοὺς ἰδίους οἴκους μεγάλους ἐκτήσαντο: the Greek condenses into the one expression the thoughts expressed by the two Eng. sentences, “They acquired great estates” and “They made their own estates great.” — ἐκ τῶν πραγμάτων: from their political activity, see on 16. 3. — πρὸς: see 32. 19, Crit. Note. — ἐκτῶντο: conative impf., see on ἐπειθεὶν § 58. — ἀλλὰ . . . φοντο εἶναι: but they thought you were satisfied if they let you share the blame.

94. νῦν ἐν τῷ θαρραλεώ: implying that under the Thirty they had acted from fear. — ἐνθυμηθέντες, ἐνθυμηθέντες: on the ἐπαναφορά see App. § 57. 5. — νῦν ἀρίστων: νῦν with πολιτεύσεθε; the reversal of the ordinary position, ἀρίστων νῦν, throws strong emphasis upon both words; see on ἴμων § 33. — πολεμίοις: ‘you now fight against the enemy, no longer against your fellow-citizens.’ Not that Athens was at war at this time, but that the former supporters of the Thirty are now back in normal relations; their wars are now against the public enemies, no longer against brothers and sons and fellow-citizens (§ 92). — ἐπικούρων: the Spartan garrison under Callibius (see Chron. App.). Lysias represents the calling in of foreign troops as a sign that the Thirty distrusted their own supporters.

95. τῶν ὀπλῶν: brought out of the ὦτι clause into immediate connection with ἀναμνήσθητε (προλέψις); its repetition in the ὦτι clause is unusual, but is justified by the length of the intervening expression and by the emphasis that rests upon the words ἀφηρέθητε τὰ ὀπλα. — ἀλλοτρίᾳ: L. & S. s.v. II. 2. — ἐκ τῆς πόλεως: strictly speaking ἐκ τῶν ἄστεως only (προείπον μὲν τοῖς ἔξω τοῦ καταλόγου μὴ εἰσίναι εἰς τὸ ἄστυ, Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 1). The term πόλις would include the Piraeus, but very many of the exiles feared to remain there; Lysias’s statement is therefore little beyond the fact. — ἐκ τῶν πόλεων: the cities of the Peloponnesian alliance, the demand being made by Sparta, the supporter of the Thirty. But not all these cities obeyed. Thebes became the chief rallying point of the exiles. When Lacedaemonian ambassadors demanded of Argos the surrender of certain of the fugitives, the Argives gave the embassy till sunset to leave the country (Dem. 15. 22); exiles were also harbored at Megara (Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 1) and at Chalcis (Lys. 24. 25). — ἐξητούντο: the imperf. of the repeated and ineffactual action; cp. the aorists ἀφηρέθητε, ἐξεκηρύχθητε, of summary, consummated actions.
96. ἀνθ’ ὅν: see on ὅργισθε

§ 80. — ἱερῶν: cp. § 98. — φονέας αὐτῶν ... ταφῆς: as in the case of Polemarchus. — τῆς νομιζομένης: for position see on τὴν ἀξίαν § 82.

97. πολεμία: the Greek predicate position provides a more compact expression than is possible in Eng.; see on ἐκτύπαστο § 93, and cp. Xen. Anab. 1. 3. 14 ἡγεμόνα αἰτεῖν Κύρον ὅστις διὰ φιλίας τῆς χώρας ἄπαξε. — ἡλθετε: the sentence began with διέφυγον, but as it develops the speaker passes over unconsciously to the second person. — ὑπαρξάντων: force, see on ὑπάρχει § 23. — τοὺς μὲν: the children left at Athens.

98. τούτων: the safe return and the rescue of their children.

— ἐφεύγετε: the time may be present or past (HA. 895 and 895 a; G. 1397; B. 606; Gl. 649), you would now be in exile, or you would have gone into exile (cp. ἐφεύγον § 16); the second trans. is better, for οὔτ' ἄν ἱερὰ ... ὡφέλησαν (aor.) must be past. — μὴ πάθητε: connect with δεῖσαντες; a negative purpose after ἐφεύγετε would in Lysias have ὑνα μὴ (GMT. 315 n. 1). — καὶ πρότεδιὰ τοὺς τούτων τρόπους ὠφελησαν, ἀ καὶ τοῖς ἀδικοῦσι σωτηρία γίγνεται. οἱ δὲ παιδεῖς ὑμῶν, ὥσπερ μὲν ἐνθάδε ἦσαν, ὑπὸ τούτων ἄν ὑβρίζοντο, οἱ δ' ἐπὶ ξένης μικρῶν ἄν ἕνεκα συμβολαίων ἐδούλευον ἐρημία τῶν ἐπικουρη-

How far slavery for debt existed in other states is uncertain; in Athens it had not existed since Solon’s reforms. Perhaps the term ἐδούλευον is used only as a strong expression for forced labor of a debtor unable to meet his note by money payment.

99. Ἀλλὰ γὰρ: force, see on § 40.— τὰ μέλλοντα: ἀ ἐμελλέν. For the non-use of ἀν see G. 1402. 3; B. 567. 1. On the tense see on ἄνωμένου § 32.— λέγειν . . . εἰπεῖν: continuative present, complexive aorist.— τέ, τέ, τέ, καί: on the πολυσύνδετον see App. § 58. 4.— τὰ μὲν: not the temples, but probably treasures from the temples, and especially tracts of land belonging to their endowments, ordinarily rented to private persons for the benefit of the temple funds.— ἐμίαυνον: the Thirty were so steeped in guilt that their very entrance into a temple was a pollution to it.— νεωρίων: the entire loss of the fleet at the close of the Peloponnesian War had left the dockyards and naval arsenal empty. It was the plan of Sparta and her Athenian supporters to see to it that the fleet should never be restored. This was the more acceptable to the Thirty as the fleet had always been the center of democratic power. We are not surprised, then, to read in Isocrates (7. 66) that the dockyards, which had cost not less than 1000 t., were sold by the Thirty for 3 t. to be broken up. But apparently the work of destruction was not completed, for four years after the Thirty Lysias (30. 22) speaks of the dockyards as then falling into decay.

ἐξετε all who are active in politics have come, not to hear us, but to take knowledge of you, what view you are going to hold about the guilty.—κατεψηφισμένους ἐσεσθαί: tense, future responsibility; cp. on εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν § 22.—τὰς τιμωρίας: the penalty due. This passage is of great interest as bearing on the question of the belief of the common people, in distinction from that of the poets and philosophers, as to the condition of the dead. Lysias assumes that the jurymen believe in the conscious existence of the dead, and their knowledge of what is being done in this world for or against them. An appeal of this sort is not uncommon in Athenian pleas, but in all other instances is qualified by some expression which implies that such knowledge on the part of the dead is only a possibility.—On the remarkable ἀσύνιδετον in the final sentence see App. § 58. 3.
Lysias wrote this speech for Mantitheus, a young man who, as a candidate for office, probably that of senator, was to appear before the outgoing Senate to pass his scrutiny (δοκυμασία).

The charge was brought against Mantitheus that he had been a member of the cavalry which had supported the Thirty, and that he was therefore not a fit candidate for office.

The following facts as to cavalry service in Athens will make clear the point of this attack, and the bearing of the argument in reply.

Before the Peloponnesian War Athens had made very little use of cavalry, but from the beginning of that war to the close of the next century a force of a thousand horsemen was maintained.

1 We know the name only from the title handed down in the Mss. In § 13 we find one Orthobulus having charge of the cavalry list of the speaker's tribe. On a fragment of an Attic treaty, probably of the year 378 B.C., an Orthobulus of the deme Ceramicus is named as one of an embassy to Byzantium. If this is the Orthobulus of § 13, that fact determines the tribe of Mantitheus, for Ceramicus belonged to Acamantis (Köhler, Hermes, V. 11).

2 See p. 253 n. 2. The office must have been that of senator or archon, for these offices only were subject to δοκυμασία by the Senate (Arist. Resp. Ath. 45. 3). In § 8, where Mantitheus cites precedents, he speaks of senators, generals, and hipparchs, but not of archons. Nor is there any reference to special duties involved in the office sought, or to the second δοκυμασία, which would follow before a law court if the office were an archonship (Arist. ibid. 55. 2).

3 These Ἰππεῖς are not to be confused with the Ἰππεῖς who formed the second property class of Athenian citizens. The name as applied to the
This force was made up from members of the first two property classes, selected by a board of ten Commissioners (κατάλογεῖς), who were appointed annually. Cavalrymen on the new list, who had served the year before, might be excused by the Senate upon their taking oath that they were physically incapable of serving longer. Newly enrolled members who refused to serve could be compelled to do so through legal proceedings. But the service was popular, and it is probable that a large part of the men of one year were glad to be enrolled for the next, and that many young men stood ready to fill vacancies. The new members were obliged to pass their δοκίμασία before the Senate.

The cavalryman furnished his own horse, and in time of peace kept it in his own stable, but both in peace and in war he received a fixed sum for its keeping. He also received from the state, on entrance into the corps, a sum of money (κατάστασις) for an outfit.

The cavalry not only served in war but played an important part in the festal processions of the city. It was a matter of pride to appear there with spirited and finely trained horses, with brilliant equipment, and with perfect training in maneuvers. The frieze of the Parthenon preserves in idealized form the beauty of such a troop of cavalry in the Panathenaic festival.

An enrolment which thus offered opportunity for display in time of peace, and a less dangerous and less irksome form of service in war, attracted the more ambitious and proud young men of the aristocracy. As the feeling against the radical democracy steadily strengthened during the Peloponnesian War it found strong sup-political division was an inheritance from a very early time when probably the aristocracy were all ἰππεῖς. In the historic time membership in the political division was purely a matter of property rating.

port in this aristocratic corps, and when at last the Thirty gained control of the city they depended largely for their military strength upon this well trained and equipped body of cavalry, coöperating with the Spartan garrison. When the returning exiles seized Phyle the cavalry went out with the garrison to attack them, and two squadrons of the cavalry were left to guard the frontier. At a later date the cavalry were drawn up outside the gate at Eleusis as the citizens were treacherously led out and seized, and they took the captives to Athens to their death. Later they took part in the unsuccessful assault on Munychia. When the Thirty were replaced by the Ten, the cavalry still supported the city party, guarding the circuit of the walls by night, and skirmishing against the Piraeus troops by day. Finally they were with the Spartans under Pausanias in their attack on the exiles at the Piraeus. From first to last they fought stubbornly to maintain the power of the oligarchy, and were the objects of the bitter hatred of the exiles.

The cavalry were, of course, included in the amnesty, but we learn from our speech (§ 6) that a vote was passed requiring every cavalryman to pay back into the treasury the sum which he had received for his outfit (κατάστασις). The full purpose of this action is not clear. The motive may have been to raise money for the empty treasury by putting this indirect tax upon the rich aristocrats, without a technical violation of the terms of the amnesty; but some consider this only a part of a wider decree dissolving the whole corps.¹

7 Xenophon was probably a member of the cavalry during this whole period. The fact of the suspicion under which he was sure to stand with the democracy in consequence of this service may well have been a strong motive in determining him to join his friend Proxenus in the expedition with Cyrus. He gives a striking testimony to the hatred of the democracy toward the cavalry corps in his statement that when, four years after the Return, the Spartans called upon Athens to furnish cavalry to help in the campaign in Asia Minor, the Athenians sent them three hundred of those who had served as cavalrymen under the Thirty, νομίζοντες κέρδος τῷ δήμῳ, εἰ ἀποδημοῦεν καὶ ἐναπδοκώντο thinking it a good thing for the Demos if they should go abroad and die there (Hell. 3. 1. 4), a statement which betrays Xenophon’s own feeling toward the people.

As public life settled back into the old channels after the Return, individuals from among these former cavalrymen of the Thirty began to come forward in political life and even to offer themselves as candidates for office. It must have seemed to many of the returned exiles that the men who had so actively supported the lost cause ought to be more than content with permission to live retired lives as private citizens, and that for them to come forward now, seeking public office or any political influence whatever, was the height of presumption, and more than was ever intended, morally, at least, by the amnesty.²

Such, then, was the state of feeling when Mantitheus presented himself for the δοκιμασία.

The senatorship was open to all citizens who had reached the age of thirty years. Fifty seats belonged to each of the ten phylae, and were distributed among the several demes according to their population. The lot was drawn in early spring among the members of the deme who offered themselves as candidates. The year of service for the new Senate began on the 14th of Scirophorion (two weeks before the close of the civil year, July–August).

The list of senators for the new year having been thus drawn up, the outgoing Senate passed upon the qualifications of each candidate. This scrutiny (δοκιμασία) did not cover questions as to technical knowledge of the duties to be performed, but only questions of good character and citizenship. Aristotle gives the following description of the examination of candidates for the archons, which probably did not differ materially from the examination for the senatorship: "When they are examined, they are asked, first, 'Who is your father, and of what deme? Who is your father's father? Who is your mother? Who is your mother's father, and of what deme?' Then the candidate is asked whether he has an ancestral Apollo and a household Zeus, and where their sanctuaries are; next, if he possesses a family tomb, and where; then, if he treats his parents well, and pays his taxes, and has served on the required military expeditions. 1 When the examiner has put these questions, he proceeds, 'Call the witnesses to these facts'; and when the candidate has produced his witnesses, he next asks, 'Does any one wish to make any accusation against this man?" (Resp. Ath., ch. 55, Kenyon's trans.).

¹ We find the statement in Harpocration (s.v. κατάστασις) that the κατάστασις was always paid back to the treasury when a cavalryman retired from service. If this is true, the decree that all now repay their κατάστασις is doubtless a part of a decree dissolving the force; but the statement in Harpocration may be based only on a misunderstanding of the present case.
² For Lysias's position on this question, see Introd. pp. 40–42.

We conclude, then, that when at the hearing before the Senate the presiding officer asked the final question, some member of the outgoing Senate, or some private citizen, presented the formal objection that Mantitheus had served in the cavalry under the Thirty. The candidate must now have been given time to prepare a defense, so that we must assume that the charge was laid over for a later meeting of the Senate. Mantitheus then went to Lysias, who had in the past ten years won a reputation as a writer of court speeches, and employed him to compose a speech.

The lawyer could not appear in the Senate to plead for his client, but the young man was obliged, according to the custom both of court and Senate, to deliver his own plea.

The problem for Lysias was, then, to learn whether the charge was true, and if true whether it formed a valid ground for his client's exclusion, and to determine what pleas could be presented to offset the charge. Moreover, Lysias had to bear in mind the fact that the speech was to be spoken by the young man himself. The more the writer could adapt the tone of the speech and the nature of the plea to the personality of his client, the less artificial would the plea appear, and the more effective would it be. He had, in short, to write the speech which the young man would himself have written if he had possessed Lysias's knowledge of law and politics, and Lysias's training in argumentation.

As the advocate went over the facts with his client, it appeared that the complainants did not attempt to cite any instance when Mantitheus had served with the cavalry, but had based their whole attack upon the fact that his name was found in the official list. The first business of the defense was, therefore, to throw discredit on this list. But if that should not convince the Senate, it remained still to show that service in the cavalry of the Thirty had not been interpreted as excluding a man from holding office under the restored democracy, if he was otherwise uncompromised. So much the lawyer could furnish for the defense. But Lysias knew the Athenian audience too well to suppose that plausible proof or valid proof would carry the case. He knew that their verdict would be determined more by their feelings than their judgment, and as he talked with his young client he saw that the man's own personality would be his best defense; that after the briefest argument on the technical charge the best possible course would be to let the young man talk in the most frank way of his own attitude and conduct. For he was a type of the best citizen, frank, enthusiastic, eager to serve the state, personally brave in danger, "the first to take the field and the last to return"; he had shown his devotion to the restored democracy by the most honorable military service; he had only to tell his story to the jury as he told it to Lysias to win their confidence. And so Lysias let him tell his story. Few speech writers would have been able to compose a speech which would let the man speak in his own hearty, unconscious way, and yet would present each fact in the most telling form. "Youth is confident and talkative, it lays stress upon details, it overestimates the importance of what it has itself experienced and accomplished. In Mantitheus these qualities seem to have been especially marked. In his interviews with his lawyer they would not have failed to manifest themselves."¹ Lysias’s mastery of simple, clear language, of brief expression, of vivid narration, was precisely what was needed in preparing a speech which should seem the natural expression of his client’s own qualities.²

The date of the speech is between 394 and 389 B.C. It cannot have been written before 394, for § 15 speaks of events of that year. It can hardly have been written after 388, because in that year Thrasybulus died, while the sportive way in which he is spoken of in § 15, and the use of the perfect tense in ἄνειδικότος in that passage, almost compel the inference that he was living when the speech was delivered. The reference (§ 18) to other military services than those of § 15 makes it likely that the speech falls a considerable time after 394. It was certainly after the tide of popular feeling had begun to turn from Thrasybulus (see on § 15).

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

I. Προοίμιον, Exordium, §§ 1–3.
The opening words strike the note of confidence that is to pervade the speech.

An important point in any good proem is its power to catch the attention of the hearer; to this end a bright paradox is an excellent means. So the attention of any senator who was expecting to hear the usual complaint against the malice of the prosecution is pleasantly quickened by the opening remark that the speaker is almost grateful to them.

The formal scheme of the rhetoricians for the framework of a speech prescribed, as the second or third division, a προθεσις (propositio), a formal statement of what the speaker proposes to prove. But here Lysias weaves his προθεσις into the proem so naturally and closely that we can hardly draw the line between them; § 3 begins as part of the proem, but its last sentence is in the full form of προθεσις.
The proem is free from rhetorical embellishment. The language is dignified and forcible, but entirely natural.

II. Ἡτορέως, Argumentatio, §§ 4–8.

A. §§ 4–5. The argument that the Thirty would not have received so late a comer into their service is weak. The time when the exiles were moving down upon the Piraeus was just the time when the Thirty were glad of help. The fact that Mantitheus chose this time to return to the city, and that he was admitted by the administration, looks as though he was avowedly on their side. From what we see later of the enthusiastic eagerness of the young man to be at the front in time of danger, it is hard to believe that, returning to Athens as the crisis was approaching, he took sides with neither party.

B. §§ 6–7. The argument from the double lists is stronger, but it is impossible to say how strong. If the testimony presented at the close of § 8 included testimony from the phylarchs that his name was not on their lists, it would be almost convincing. But it is not quite certain that the absence of the name from the list of those who received the cavalry outfit proves that he was not in the service during the last weeks. May not some have furnished their own outfit in those times of great financial need on the part of the administration, and would this not be particularly likely in the case of a late comer and well-to-do volunteer like Mantitheus? The most surprising thing is that neither the prosecution nor the defense seems to have produced the testimony of the officers under whom Mantitheus would have served.

C. § 8. The third argument would be conclusive if we could count upon consistent action by the Athenian courts or Senate. The amnesty, if followed in good faith, ought to have precluded even the raising of the question of excluding a former member of the cavalry from the Senate. But the fact that Lysias does not dare let the case rest upon this one argument and that he passes over it quickly, shows how unreliable he felt the temper of the people to be.
The language is as simple and direct as that of the proem. There is nothing to suggest to the hearer that Mantitheus is speaking words other than his own.

III. Second Πράσων, Propositio, § 9.
Lysias now prepares the way for his main defense, the presentation of the young man in his own frank, enthusiastic personality.

IV. Διήγησις, Narratio, §§ 10–18.
For this broader phase of the defense Lysias turns to narrative. There are three ways of using narrative as a part of a plea: the speaker may give his full narrative and then argue the conclusions to be drawn from it; 1 or he may narrate step by step, and at each step argue as to the conclusion to be drawn from a particular incident; 2 or he may give the full narrative without argument or comment, trusting to the power of the narrative itself to make its own argument. This last and most artistic form Lysias chooses for Mantitheus, making only the slightest comment on the bearing of the several statements. As Mantitheus proceeds with his story the senators see in him the generous brother, the temperate and orderly young man in a social circle inclined to intemperance and folly, the eager young soldier, seeking out the post of danger, and generous in sharing his means with his poorer comrades. If a little too eager in putting himself forward, and a little too confident in telling of his own achievements, yet he has only the amiable faults of youth. It needed no argument to convince the hearers that such a man as that, and with such a record of chivalrous service to the restored democracy, was not a dangerous man to sit in their Senate. Lysias leaves the simple, clear account to make its own impression.

V. Δώσις, Refutatio, §§ 18–21.
In a strict sense all that a defendant says in his argument is in the nature of a "refutation" of the charges; but the term λύσις

1 So in Lys. XII, the narrative of the abuse of Lysias and his family.
2 So in Lys. XII, the discussion of the career of Theramenes (see p. 56).
applies also to the answer to attacks of the other side subordinate to the main attack. Lysias knows that two such minor attacks are likely to be made; one, that the defendant belongs to the long-haired, swaggering Laconizers, the other that he is a forward and conceited aspirant for political preferment. Lightly and modestly Mantitheus answers both, without attempting to deny that he has given some occasion for such an impression. Then, with a word of compliment to the senators, quite unexpectedly, without summing up or final plea or peroration of any kind, he steps down.

This omission of the usual appeal to the feelings of the hearers is quite in keeping with the confident tone of the whole speech. The omission of the peroration is also wise from the rhetorical point of view. Throughout the speech Lysias has repressed everything that could suggest artificial or studied speech; it is in keeping with this that he omits that part of the plea in which rhetorical art was usually most displayed.

The language of sections IV and V preserves the simplicity of the earlier sections. We notice only a tendency to use larger and more rounded sentences in the main narrative, §§ 13–17, giving a compactness and force that are less often found in narrative style.1 There is also a considerable use of antithetic cola 2 in this part of the plea, but hardly more than is natural in any earnest speech.

No speech of Lysias offered a better opportunity for his peculiar skill in fitting the speech to the man (ἠθοποιία); 3 having decided to let the case depend chiefly on the impression which Mantitheus's personality (ἤθος) would make upon the hearers, he developed every thought and expression which would reveal this, and suppressed every other.

It is noticeable that there is no counter-attack on the prosecution, no denunciation of those who, according to his claim, must have maliciously inserted his name in the list of the cavalry. Here, too, he is a gentleman and speaks like one. He says plainly that the motive in this complaint is personal injury to himself (§ 1), and speaks of the complainants as enemies of his (τῶν ἔχοντων, § 3), but that is all. Lysias always refrains from abuse and scurrilous language, but he knows how, on occasion, to attack his opponent (cp. p. 31); in this speech he refrains from it altogether.

Ἡγούμαι γὰρ τοῖς ἀδίκως διαβεβλημένοις τούτους έναν μεγίστων ἁγαθῶν 5 αὐτῶν, οὕτως ἄν αὐτοῖς ἀναγκάζωσιν εἰς ἔλεγχον τῶν αὐτῶν βεβιωμένων καταστήναι. ἐγὼ γὰρ οὕτω σφόδρα ἐμαυτῷ πιστεύω, ὡστε ἐλπίζω καὶ εἰ τις πρὸς με τυγχάνει ἄνδρας διακείμενος, ἐπειδὰν ἔμοι λέγωντος ἀκούσῃ περὶ τῶν πεπραγμένων, μεταμελήσειν αὐτῷ 10 καὶ πολὺ βελτίω με εἰς τὸν λοιπὸν χρόνον ἡγησθαι. 3 ἀξιῶ δέ, ὁ Βουλή, ἐὰν μὲν τούτῳ μόνῳ ὑμῖν ἐπιδείξων,

1. συνήδη: the older Attic form is ἡδη, contracted from ἤδεα (used by Homer). The later ἠδεω became the usual form in the fourth century B.C. — τοῖς κατηγόροις βουλομένοις: as οἶδα takes the accusative participial construction in indirect discourse, so σύνοδα takes the dative. — οὕτως: see on 12. 40. — εἰς ἔλεγχον κτλ.: to present themselves for an investigation of their life. — τῶν βεβιωμένων: cp. Dem. 18. 265 ἐξέτασον τοῖν παρ᾿ ἀλληλα τὰ σοὶ καμοὶ βεβιωμένα examine side by side your life and mine.

2. καὶ εἰ: even if. So 19. 3, 19. 37, 19. 59, 34. 8. καὶ εἰ represents a statement as an extreme supposition, or as the utmost that can be assumed, or as improbable. But εἰ καὶ represents the statement as something that, while not disputed, is of little importance for the matter at issue, or as something that is waived aside; so in 19. 1, 32. 11.

3. τοῖς καθεστηκόσι πράγμασι: to the existing government, viz. the democracy. τὰ πράγματα is often used of the government, as here, and in 12. 65, 25. 3, 25. 8, 25. 10, 25. 12. But also in the sense of administration of public affairs, political control; so in 12. 93, 25. 14, 25. 18, 25. 23. — ἡνάγκασμαι: see on εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν 12. 22. — τῶν αὐτῶν κινδύνων: not the dangers of the exile under the Thirty, to which citizens so proudly referred in these times, but dangers in the Corinthian War, where Mantitheus has served the restored democracy and thereby shown his loyalty to it. — μηδέν κτλ.: not yet do I claim any advantage for myself, viz. until I have shown more than this, I make no plea for special consideration from you. — πλέον: more than if I did not have such conduct to my credit. — καὶ περὶ τὰ ἄλλα: in all other relations also. — μετρίως βεβιωκῶς: an expression which comes from the heart of Greek ideals of life. The Greek, and especially the Athenian, demanded avoidance of extremes as a fundamental principle in ethics, precisely as in literature and art. Asceticism was as far from the ideal as drunkenness, officiousness as little worthy of praise as indifference. The words μετρίως βεβιωκῶς express this ideal life both in private and public relations. μηδέν ἄγαν is the ancient proverbial expression of the same standard, σωφροσύνη its abstract name. In Athenian public life the doctrine of democratic equality strengthened this principle. Especially was this quality demanded of the rich or gifted man, who could easily show insolence toward common men. Cp. Taylor, Ancient Ideals, I. 202 ff. — δέομαι: he had said, “I do not claim”; by a neat turn he now uses the modest “I beg” (δέομαι). — δοκιμάζειν: in the technical sense; see Introd. p. 133. — χείρους: i.e. to hold them in less esteem than in the past. So the plaintiff in the speech against Diogiton tells the jury, in case he shall fail to prove his charges, to hold him and his associates in less esteem for all future time (ημᾶς δὲ εἰς τὸν λαυπὸν χρόνον ἡγεῖσθαι χείρους εἶναι 32. 3) — ἐπὶ: force, see on 12. 17 — μετέσχον: ingressive aorist, received a share. 4. γὰρ: explicative γὰρ, see on 19. 12.— τῆς συμφορᾶς: the battle of Aegospotami. Cp. on 12. 43.— ὡς: Lysias uses ὡς oftener than any other word for “to” with personal words after verbs of motion. (He always uses it when the idea of going to one’s house or shop is clearly added to that of going to the man.) Cp. 19. 22, 19. 23, 24. 19, 24. 20. παρά is used in this way only in 1. 15, 1. 35, 3. 8. πρὸς only in 32. 10 (twice), 32. 14, 1. 16, 1. 19, 4. 7, 7. 2, Fr. 1. 1.—Σάτυρον: In a speech of Isocrates, deκατελθείν: the compound is doubly fitting as applied to the ‘coming down’ from their hill fort, Phyle (see on 12. 52), and the ‘coming back’ from exile, for which it is the regular expression (cp. § 6; so 25. 29 φειγόντες μὲν . . . κατελθόντες δέ). — πένθ’ ἡμέραις: in emphatic position and drawing πρότερον with it from its natural position before πρίν.

5. εἰκός: for the prominence of the argument from ‘probability’ (εἰκός) in the teaching of the current rhetoric, see Introd. p. 14. — εἷς: this is the only place where Lysias uses εἷς καρόν for the ordinary ἐν καρῷ (cp. 30. 14 ἐν τοιούτῳ καρῷ); the accus. with εἷς represents the act as breaking into the time. — μετέχειν: compare the tense with that of μετέχον § 3. — ἔχοντες: impf. with reference to φαίνονται; so ἀποδημοῦσι and ἐξαμαρτάνουσι impf. with reference to μεταδίδοναι. See on ἀνωμένον 12. 32. — ἡτίμαζον: i.e. visited them with ἀτιμία; impf. referring to the general policy of the ruling faction of the Thirty.

6. σανδίον: a wooden tablet with whitened surface, used for public documents which were not of sufficient importance to be inscribed on stone. The prosecution had probably obtained from the official archives the list of cavalrymen called out for service under the Thirty. Some men whose names were in such a list may have been out of the city, others excused from serving (cp. Arist. Resp. Ath. 49. 2), and under the great pressure of the final conflict, others, not originally drawn for the service, are likely to have been accepted. We need not assume any tampering with the list to account for the statement that it was not reliable. — εὔθες: meaning, cp. on 12. 87.

— ἵππευειν, ἀποδημούντων : tense, see on ἀνωμένου 12. 32. — ἐκεῖνος . . . μέγιστος : but the greatest proof lies in another fact (not in this (τοῦτο) worthless list). Although the pronoun refers to what immediately follows and to what is nearest in thought, the fact of its sharp contrast brings in ἐκεῖνος in place of ὁδε. For gender see on τοῦτον 12. 37. — φυλάρχους : one phylarch was elected annually from each of the ten phylae as commander of its cavalry contingent. The whole force was under the command of two hippocars. The phylarchs here referred to are the new board, elected after the return of the exiles. — ἀπενεγκεῖν τοὺς ἵππεύσαντας : make a return of the names of those who joined the cavalry (under the Thirty). — καταστάσεις : see Introd. p. 131. — ἄναπράξητε: mood, HA. 881 a; G. 1369; B. 590, 674; Gl. 642 a. For the usage of Lysias and others in the choice between subj. and opt. in final clauses after a secondary tense, see GMT. 320 n. 1.

7. τούνν : this particle is a compound of τοῖ (locative of the demonstrative τό), and νῦν in its weakened form νῦν, as a particle of transition. The τοῖ was a weaker equivalent of the Homeric τὸ = in that case, therefore. τούνν thus receives illative force (= therefore) from its first member, and transitional force from its second. In its common use sometimes one prevails, sometimes the other, but for the strictly illative use Lysias commonly prefers οὖν. His uses of τούνν are these: (A) As an illative particle = οὖν therefore, 12. 50, 12. 84, 19. 38, 19. 51, 24. 3, 24. 7, 24. 26, 25. 20, 25. 23. (B) As a weak illative, marking the close of an argument, or in turning to testimony, or in commenting on it, 12. 37, 12. 46, 12. 79, 16. 9, 19. 23, and often. (C) With slight illative force, after the statement of a general fact or principle, τούνν introduces the individual instance to which the principle is applied, 19. 57, 19. 60, 25. 11, 25. 12. (D) As a mere particle of transi-
The argument is, ‘The absence of my name from the phylarchs’ lists is conclusive, for a name could not fail there, as it might so easily in the complainants’ list.’ The usual explanation of the possibility of erasure from the state list is that it was kept posted in a public place. But if erasure had been so easy, few names would have remained on the bulletin boards after the Return. The possibility of erasure lay in the possibility of securing the connivance of the keepers of the records.—

ειν έκείνοις δέ: the placing of δέ after ειν έκείνοις (cp. εκ μὲν just before) throws emphasis on ειν έκείνοις. So in § 10; 24. 4, 25. 22. For similar displacement of μὲν see on 12. 15.—

8. ἐτί: furthermore, cp. ἐπείτα § 6. — εἴπερ: see on 12. 27. — ἄν: with both ἦ and ἥξιον. — ἦ: the older Attic form is ἦ, contracted from ἦα (used by Homer); the later form ἰν was beginning to appear in literature late in the fifth century; cp. ἦδη and ἦδειν (§ 1, N.). — ὡς . . . πεποιη-kός: with a participle ὡς has “subjective” force. The idea expressed by the participle is represented as lying in the mind of some person, as something which appears to him to be true, or something which he assumes to be true. It may or may not be true in fact, and the writer may or may not believe in it; subjective ὡς does not, like the English as if, imply untruth. Cp. on 12. 13. So 12. 2, 16. 14, 22. 5, 24. 13, 25. 13.—πεποιηκός, πέπονθε: perf. because the question is as to the speaker’s credit or guilt. See mένους: the Athenians did not venture to make universal their general principle of appointment to office by lot. The lot applied to officials whose work did not absolutely demand political or military experience or technical knowledge. But they elected all higher military officers, the chief treasury officials, the officers who superintended the training of the cadets, and a few others whose work needed special knowledge or experience.—ὡστε μηδὲν . . . ἤγεισθε: so that you must not sup-

The Greek, unlike the English, recognized the value of the instinctive tendency to pile up negatives for emphatic denial, and made the usage normal, under restrictions which avoided confusion. Morgan's translation gives an excellent equivalent under the limitations of English usage: "There has never been any ground of complaint at all against me on the part of a single solitary man."

— μήδεπώποτε ... μηδε ... μηδέν: H.A. 1030; G. 1619; B. 433; Gl. 487. The Greek, unlike the English, recognized the value of the instinctive tendency to pile up negatives for emphatic denial, and made the usage normal, under restrictions which avoided confusion. Morgan's translation gives an excellent equivalent under the limitations of English usage: "There has never been any ground of complaint at all against me on the part of a single solitary man."

— μήδε πρὸς ἕνα: stronger than μηδένα by bringing ἕνα into sharp relief. πρὸς ἕνα is not strictly equal to a prep. with the genitive, complaint coming from one, but has originally the meaning in my relation toward as in πρὸς τὸν ἄδελφόν and πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλους just above. This peculiar use of πρὸς arises from the fact that with words of friendship, agreement, hostility, complaint, and the like, we may think of the friendship, hostility, etc., as coming to us in our relation toward a person (πρὸς τῶν), as well as coming to us from a person (παρά τίνος). For other examples see 32. 2; 10. 23 τίνος ὑμῶν ἵππος ἐγκλήματος on the ground of what complaint from you against me? So Thuc. 5. 105. 1 πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὑρενείας favor from heaven; Isoc. 7. 8 τής ἔχθρας τής πρὸς βασιλέα the hostility of the king; Dem. 18. 36 τὴν μὲν ἀπέχθειαν τὴν πρὸς Θηβαίοις καί Θεταλοῦς τῇ πόλει γενέσθαι the hatred of the Thebans and Thessalians came to the city.

— κύβος: gambling with dice was common. The son of Alcibiades was alleged to have lost his property at dice (κατακυβεύοντας τὰ ὅντα 14. 27). The aged Isocrates includes it in his list of the employments of the young men of the times as contrasted with the earnest pursuits of the youths of Marathonian Athens: The young men did not waste their time in the gambling halls, nor among the flute girls, nor in company of the sort in which they now spend their days, but they attended to the business appointed to them, admiring and emulating their superiors in these employments. And they so shunned the Agora that if they did have to pass through it, they were seen to do it with great modesty and propriety. But as for eating or drinking in a tavern, not even a respectable slave would have ventured to do that (7. 48, 49). — πάντας αὐτοὺς: οὗτος is the usual word for taking up the relative pronoun and carrying it into the antecedent clause, when the relative clause has preceded (οὗτος analeptic); but here the weaker αὐτούς takes the place of τούτως in order that the whole stress may fall upon πάντας. In the next clause the pronoun becomes emphatic, and the stronger τούτως appears; cp. 25. 11 and note.

12. ἔτι: cp. ἔτι § 8 and ἔπειτα § 6. — δίκην, γραφήν, ἀπαγγέλλαν: δίκη is a civil suit, γραφή a criminal indictment, ἀπαγγέλλα a summary criminal prosecution (cp. on 12. 48). Mantitheus does not, as Lysias himself does in the twelfth speech (§ 4), claim to have kept entirely out of the courts, but only that there has been no litigation that reflected upon his character. — τοίνυν: further, introducing the next detail in the argument; cp. ἔτι above, and see on § 7, τοίνυν (D).

13. πρῶτον μὲν: correl. with μετὰ τὰ ἀντίτοινν § 15. — τὴν συµµαχίαν: When, in 395 B.C., the Spartans were fully engaged in their contest against Persia on the coast of Asia Minor, Thebes saw the possibility of becoming the center of a coalition against Sparta. Athens was ready to grasp any opportunity to weaken Sparta, and the veterans of the democratic exile were grateful for the help which they had received at Thebes when banished by the Thirty acting with the support of Sparta. The advance of two Spartan armies upon Boeotia led to an urgent call for help from Athens. The response of Athens was the first step in her reentrance into Hellenic affairs after her entire prostration. — πρὸς Βοιωτοῦς: on omission of the article see Crit. Note. — Ἀλίαρτον: Haliartus was the Boeotian city immediately threatened by Lysander’s army. Before the Athenian contingent arrived the Spartans had been defeated and Lysander killed (Chron. App.) — ἐπειδὴ πάντας κτλ.: when I saw that all believed the cavalry were likely to be safe. The Athenians never lost their dread of the Spartan hoplites. — εἶναι δὲίν: here used of what ‘ought’ from the nature of the case to follow. — ἀδοκιμάστων: without passing the scrutiny of the Senate. See Introd. p. 131. Shortly before this Lysias had written two speeches for clients who prosecuted the son of Alcibiades for just this conduct at this time. — Ὄρθοβούλῳ: if the method of making up the cavalry roll described by Aristotle (Introd. p. 131) was in use as early as this,—and the reference to the dokimasia of the cavalry supports this view,— Orthobulus must have been the καταλογεύς of Mantitheus’s tribe (ὑπὸ Ὄρθοβούλου κατελεγμένος) and unable to erase a name, now that the lists had been passed on by the Senate and handed over to the cavalry commanders. Perhaps Mantitheus appealed to him to secure the change by special act of the Senate. But it is possible that the method of Aristotle’s time was not yet in use, and that at this earlier time the phylarchs drew up the lists and had power to excuse members, even after dokimasia by the Senate. On this supposition Orthobulus was the phylarch of Mantitheus's tribe.
See Introd. p. 130.

14. τῶν δημοτῶν: the contingent from a deme was one of the units of which the levy from the tribe was made up. Fellow-demesmen were neighbors and knew one another's circumstances. — ἐφορ ἄιων: the state allowed an average of two obols a day as pay to the hoplite, and two obols for food; the four obols were about what an unskilled laborer would earn at home. A poor man who had to support his family at home on this pay might well need help. Cp. App. § 63 f. Under the earlier military organization only members of the three higher property classes served as hoplites, the men of the lowest class, the Thetes, serving only as light-armed troops, or as rowers in the fleet. But at the time of the Sicilian Expedition the hoplites had been so reduced in number by pestilence and war that Thetes were called in to arm as hoplites and serve as fighting men on ship-board (ἐπιβάται τῶν νεῶν Θυκ. 6. 43). From that time on they were used for similar service. We do not know how far they were called upon for hoplite service on land. Cp. Gulick, The Life of the Ancient Greeks, 190 ff.— τριάκοντα δραχμάς: as much as the man would receive from the state for service of a month and a half. — ἐκατέρῳ: HA. 624 d; G. 914; B. 319. — ὡς: force, see on § 8.

15. μετὰ ταῦτα: the battle of Haliartus was in the autumn of 395, the expedition to Corinth in the following spring or early summer. The victory at Haliartus brought Corinth into the anti-Spartan alliance of Athens and Thebes, and in the next summer the allies attempted to hold the Isthmus of Corinth against the advance of a large Peloponnesian army. The armies met at the north of the stream Nemea, on the coast a little west of Corinth. Never before had so large forces of Greeks met in battle. The Athenian hoplites were in the most dangerous position, for they stood opposed to the Spartans, and in such way that the Spartans could easily outflank them if the Athenians kept connection with the rest of the army. The Athenians were defeated with heavy loss. This led to the defeat of the whole army of the allies, and they were forced to retreat upon Corinth (Xen. Hell. 4. 2. 9–23). — τῆς πρώτης: sc. τάξεως. Case, HA. 732 a; G. 1096, 1094. 7; B. 355. 2; Gl. 508. — μάλιστα ... δυστυχησάσης: therefore probably on the left wing, which was overlapped by the Spartan right. — ἐναποθανόντων: ἐν = 'therein,' ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ δυστυχίᾳ. — σεμνοῦ: a word properly of good meaning, but often used as here in a sarcastic sense. The σεμνὸς ἅνηρ is the man who 'takes himself seriously.' For the relation of this slur on Thrasybulus to the question of the date of this speech, see Introd. p. 136. Thrasybulus was at first the idol of the people under the restored democracy; but his moderate and conservative policy, sternly opposed to every violation of the amnesty and every indulgence of revenge, grew vexatious to the more radical element. Only an inflexible will could keep back the crowd from acts which would reopen the old controversies and endanger the democracy itself. It is not strange that they came to feel that he was self-willed and that 'he despised the people' (αὐθάδης, ἐπερότης τοῦ δήμου, Schol. Ar. Eccl. 203). The defeat of the expedition to Corinth in 394 was a blow to his reputation. Then came Conon with his foreign fleet and Persian subsidies (see XIX. Introd. p. 160) and in the full tide of enthusiasm for the new navy and its commander the people forgot their allegiance to Thrasybulus. It is significant that Lysias dares to sneer at him in a speech before a body largely made up of democrats of the Return. — Στειρῶσ: Thrasybulus was of the deme Stiria. — ἀνειδικότος: the perfect would not be used if Thrasybulus were now dead; nor would Lysias be likely to speak of him in this jesting tone. He evidently refers to some well-known speech of his.

16. χωρίων ἵσχυρῶν: the occupation of these posts held back the great Peloponnesian army from crossing the Isthmus and joining Agesilacus, who, recalled from Asia, and coming by the land route, was entering Boeotia from the north. — προσίειναι: see Crit. 17. ὡστ' ... οὐκ ἂν δικαίως ... ἐξοίεν: ὡστε here much like ὡστε with impv., § 8; stronger than οὖν.— τοῖς ... ἀξιοῦσι: case, see on ὀργίζονται 12. 80. — ἵνα κτλ.: a neat turn of the thought; the jury do not for a moment understand him as really representing this as his motive. 18. ἄλλων: as the expedition to Haliartus was the first after the Peloponnesian War, and the one to Corinth the second, these other expeditions and services in garrison must have been after 394. The speech, then, could hardly have been delivered before 392; cf. Introd. p. 136.— πώποτε: very emphatic by its position in its own clause, and by the chiastic arrangement with πάντα τῶν χρόνων.— τῶν πρώτων μὲν: for the position of μὲν see on 12. 15.— τοὺς ... πολιτευμένους: the object of σκοπεῖν.— ἐκ τῶν τοιούτων: ἐκ with the gen. to express the source from which the knowledge must come. — κομῆ: the Homeric custom of wearing the hair long (κάρη κομῶντες) prevailed always at Sparta, but at Athens from about the time of the Persian wars only boys wore long hair. When they became of age their hair was cut as a sign of their entering into manhood, and from that time on they wore hair about as short as modern custom prescribes; only the athletes made a point of wearing it close-cut. Cp. Gulick, 175 ff. But there was a certain aristocratic set of young Spartomaniacs who affected Spartan appearance along with their pro-Spartan sentiments, and who were proud of wearing long hair, to the disgust of their fellow-citizens. These were the men who largely made up the cavalry corps. Aristophanes in the Knights (580) makes them say to the people that they have only one thing to ask, if ever peace comes and they be free from trouble: μη φθονεῖ ήμῖν κομῆ κομῆς ἀπεστελεγμένους do not begrudge us our long hair or our shining skin. The plain old Strepsiades says of his spendthrift son ὃ δὲ κόμην ἔχων ἵππαξεται (Ar. Clouds 14). The extreme Laconizers are thus described: ἐλακωνομάνουν ἀπαντες ἀνθρωποί τότε, ἐκόμων, ἐπείνων, ἔρρυπων, ἐσωκράτων, σκυτάλες ἐφόρουν all men had Lacomonmania then; they wore long hair, they starved themselves, they went dirty, they Socratized, they carried canes (Ar. Birds 1281). — ἐκ τῶν ἐθελόντων: such men are the source of the common good; agency would be expressed by ὑπό.

19. πολλοὶ κτλ.: 'many who have the voice and dress of quiet gentlemen.' Cp. on μετρίως βεβιωκός § 3. — μικρὸν διαλεγόμενοι: a loud voice was by Athenian, even more than by modern, standards a mark either of ill-breeding or of conceit. A client of Demosthenes (37. 52) complains that his enemies say of him, Νικόβουλος δ’ ἐπίθονός ἦστι, καὶ ταχέως βαδίζει, καὶ μέγα φθέγγεται, καὶ βακτηρίαν φορεῖ. Nicobulus is crabbed, and he walks fast, and talks loud, and carries a cane. Mantitheus makes no apology for his voice and manner, which are quite in keeping with his natural impulsiveness and his good opinion of himself.—κοσμίως ἀμπεχόμενοι: the Athenian gentleman was as careful of his dress as the Spartan was careless. Neglect here was another affectation of some of the young aristocrats.

20. ἰθοδόμην: empirical aorist. “When the aorist has a temporal adverb or a negative or a numeral with it, it is best referred to the same class with the English perfect of experience (empirical aorist),” GS. 259. With ἦδη as here 19. 4; with πολλάκις ἦδη 22. 16, 25. 28; with πολλοί 19. 45; with πολλοί ἦδη 19. 51, 22. 18, 34. 10.—νεώτερος: the young Athenian attained his majority in his nineteenth year, but for two years his service as cadet in garrison (see Gulick 89 f.) almost necessarily precluded his exercising the privileges of a citizen. From his twentieth year on he might take any part in the Ecclesia which his modesty permitted.—ὑπὲρ πραγμάτων: in § 10 Mantitheus connects the loss of the family property with the disaster to the city and his father’s troubles; the relation to the foreign prince implies wide commercial connections. Probably some of Mantitheus’s property claims were affected by the early legislation after the Return.—τῶν προγόνων: proleptic with ἐνθυμούμενος, HA. 878; B. 717. 18; or it may be considered as modifying the whole clause ὅτι... πέπαυται.—

21. τοὺς τοιούτους: i.e. men who take a leading part in politics.
— τὰ γὰρ ἀληθῆ χρῆ λέγειν: why need Mantitheus apologize for his statement? The answer lies in the fact that the Athenian theory was that the ideal citizen was the quiet one (see on κοσμίον 12. 20); Mantitheus tells the senators that in practice the honors go to the men who put themselves forward.
INTRODUCTION

The events which led up to this speech began with the connection of two ambitious Athenians, Nicophemus and his son Aristophanes, with the naval enterprises of Conon.

After the disaster at Aegospotami Conon, and probably Nicophemus with him, fearing to return to Athens, took refuge with Evagoras, king of Salamis in Cyprus. Supported by Evagoras, Conon passed into Persian service, and was enabled to bring to Athens his Graeco-Persian fleet and Persian subsidies at the critical moment when, with Thebes, Corinth, and Argos, Athens was again facing Sparta in war (the “Corinthian War,” 395–386). In the brief but brilliant career of Conon which followed, Nicophemus had a share, and after Conon’s death in Cyprus (about 390), he remained there, the friend and helper of Evagoras.¹

The attempts of Evagoras to gain control of all Cyprus brought him into collision with Persia. Hard pressed to defend himself against a threatened attack, he sent envoys to Athens proposing an alliance and asking for ships and men (§ 21, Xen. Hell. 4. 8. 24). Although the Athenians were receiving Persian support in their war against Sparta, they took the doubtful step of securing Evagoras’s support by voting the alliance and dispatching a squadron of ten ships under Philocrates (390 B.C.). On the voyage they were overtaken by a Spartan squadron and all were captured (Xen. l.c.).

¹ For Nicophemus’s connection with Conon see, besides our speech, Diodor. 14. 81 (where Νικόδημος is probably a mistake of the Mss. for Νικόφημος) and Xen. Hell. 4. 8. 8.
INTRODUCTION

The threatened Persian attack on Evagoras was delayed, but in the spring of 387, in response to a second appeal, another fleet of ten ships, with eight hundred peltasts, was sent out from Athens under Chabrias (Xen. Hell. 5. 1. 10). With their help Evagoras completed his conquest of Cyprus (Nepos, Chabrias 2. 2).

In the negotiations with Evagoras and the equipment of ships for him, a prominent part had been taken by a son of Nicophemus, Aristophanes, who had all the time made his home in Athens.

Aristophanes, in response to letters received from his father, did everything possible to secure favorable action by the state, made every effort to raise money to supplement the equipment of the fleet, and was sent as envoy, probably in advance of the fleet, to complete the negotiations with Evagoras.

It is uncertain whether these efforts were in connection with the first or the second expedition. We know only that sooner or later Aristophanes and Nicophemus fell under the gravest charges on the part of their countrymen, and that they were arrested and summarily executed. They were granted no opportunity for defense, their friends were not even allowed to see them after their arrest, and their bodies were not given to their family for burial (§ 7). Their property was declared confiscate, and so much of it as could be found was seized and sold.¹

¹ Both time and place of these events are in dispute. The time reference in § 29 is too vague for any safe reckoning. Thalheim (with Frohberger and Fuhr) places the efforts of Nicophemus and Aristophanes to aid Evagoras in connection with the first expedition. He thinks that its total failure led to the fierce anger against its promoters; that Nicophemus and Aristophanes, charged with ἀπάτη τοῦ δῆμου, were brought back to Athens on a dispatch ship, and that they were put to death after a summary trial, in which they were refused the ordinary rights of defendants.

Blass (Att. Bered. 1² 531) holds that the connection of Nicophemus and Aristophanes was with the second expedition; that afterwards charges were brought against them in the Ecclesia, and that that body condemned them to death; that the penalty was executed in Cyprus by Chabrias.

In favor of the first expedition are the facts that Aristophanes went as envoy (§ 23), that in our speech there is no reference to an earlier expedition,
But the amount of property thus seized fell so far short of what they were supposed to have had, after their intimate connection with Conon and Evagoras, that it was suspected that a part was being concealed in the interest of the widow and children of Aristophanes. Suit was accordingly brought against the wife's father, now an old man of seventy years. His death before the time of trial threw the suit over to his son, who had now to defend the estate, and for whom Lysias wrote our speech.\(^1\)

The prosecution demanded the seizure of the speaker's property to reimburse the treasury for that part of Aristophanes's estate supposed to have been concealed by the speaker's father.\(^2\)

The date of the trial is 387, or very early in 386, for the generalship of Diotimus (388/7) is a recent event (§ 50), and the and that the severity of treatment is best explained by the anger of the people at the failure of the first. This theory, too, gives room for some form of trial, which is implied in § 7, Πρὶν παραγενήθαι τινά αὐτοῖς ἐλεγχομένους ὅς ἥδικον. The objection to the theory is the difficulty in believing that an Athenian citizen, brought to Athens under arrest, could have been treated with such disregard of all legal forms and privileges. But we know one case, just after the restoration of the democracy, in which a man was executed without trial (Arist. Resp. Ath. 40. 2), and we hear of such action being proposed in other cases in the period under discussion (Lys. 22. 2, 27. 8; Isoc. 17. 42).

Meyer (Gesch. des Alt. V. §§ 870 Anm., 873 Anm.) connects the efforts of Aristophanes with the first expedition, but thinks that the execution was in Cyprus after the arrival of the second.

The confiscation of the property seems to have been by separate action, for Harpocratios (s. v. Χάρπος) has preserved the title of a speech of Lysias Κατ' Ἀριστοφάνου περὶ τῆς δημεσίας τῶν Ἀριστοφάνους χρημάτων. (For the natural connection of Lysias with the fortunes of this family see on § 15.)

\(^1\) The family connection is:—

\(^2\) Strictly speaking, the title of our speech, Περὶ τῶν Ἀριστοφάνους χρημάτων, as handed down by the Mss., is incorrect. The property now at stake is that of Aristophanes's brother-in-law.
Peace of Antalcidas (winter of 387/6 or spring of 386) is not yet concluded (the speaker is trierarch, § 62).

The events which led to this speech were connected with two dangerous tendencies in the political life of the fourth century, the enrichment of naval commanders through their office, and the hasty and unreasonable punishment of public officers in response to a fickle public sentiment.

Under the Athenian Empire the cost of the navy had been amply provided for from the ordinary revenues of the state; the ships were built and furnished with the more important rigging; the other expenses of equipment and repair were met by the trierarchs, while the pay of seamen and soldiers — some two hundred men to a trireme — was furnished from the state treasury. But after the Peloponnesian War had cut off all revenues from allies, it was only by the utmost exertions that sufficient ships could be built and equipped. The regular payment for the men — a sum ranging from $\frac{1}{2}$ t. to 1 t. a month for each trireme — was a burden for which the state could not adequately provide. The generals and trierarchs found themselves in constant difficulty with their men; more and more they were forced to find money for their payment by the operations of the fleet itself. The first and most dangerous source of supply was the subsidy from Persian satraps or the princes of the Asiatic cities. Conon’s fleet, which won the battle of Cnidus, was created and supported by Persian subsidies; it was for a time so supported after it passed into the service of Athens. When the pay came from foreign sources, the generals could be under no such system of accurate accounting as when all funds came from the treasury of the state, while the relations with the foreign powers offered dangerous opportunities for personal corruption.

With the attempt to bring the island and coast cities back under Athenian rule, after the battle of Cnidus, payment from these cities was resumed, whether by way of a stated tax, or of penalty for resistance. From others forced contributions were exacted as the fleet cruised from city to city. The collection of most of these funds probably rested with the generals. Upon the restoration of Athenian control of the Hellespont (390–389) the tax on incoming and outgoing vessels was reimposed, and new opportunities were opened for favors between commanders and merchants. To these were added the opportunities for gifts and bribes from merchants whose ships had to have a convoy in these years when hostile fleets were constantly cruising in the Aegean.

Commanders of Athenian fleets, and even of single ships, were thus put into a position where they handled large sums of money, under circumstances in which there could be no efficient control by the home government, and which offered constant temptation to corruption. Nor was it always easy for an honest man to draw the line between bribes and legitimate gifts from rich patrons, like the Persian satraps and such princes as Evagoras.

It came to be expected during the Corinthian War (395–386) that the higher naval officers would enrich themselves. It is significant that in our speech it is assumed, without apology, that Conon and his associates were all the time building up their private fortunes (§§ 35–36).

The effect of all this was to undermine the confidence of the people in their naval officers. The first reverse was the signal for their enemies to come before the people with charges that they were betraying the state for money. Public opinion was quick to respond with the demand for punishment — usually the confiscation of their property, often banishment or death. And this tendency was increased by the desperate straits of the political leaders to find money for the treasury. The city was attempting to take her old place in international affairs, with no sufficient revenue; the people saw in each new confiscation relief for the treasury. Men were even heard to plead in court for a conviction on the ground that only thus would the treasury have money to pay them for sitting on the case (Lys. 27. 1).

The case of Nicophemus and Aristophanes is but one among many between 388 and 386, when these prosecutions were at their height. It is disappointing to find that Lysias, the stout defender of justice in this suit, was, nevertheless, ready to use his pen on the side of confiscation and death when occasion offered. We have three speeches of his written about a year before the present one, in which he makes every appeal to the prejudice and suspicion of the masses. The following extracts will show the spirit in which public men and even friends of the great liberator, Thrasybulus, were attacked:

From the Speech against Epicrates (27. 8-11) : "In my opinion, Athenians, if you should put these men to death without giving them trial or opportunity of defense, they could not be said to have perished 'without trial' (ἀκριτοί), but rather to have received the justice that is their due. For those are not 'without trial' upon whom you pass judgment with knowledge of their deeds, but rather those who, slandered by their enemies, in matters unknown to you, are deprived of a hearing. But the real accusers of these men now on trial are their own deeds, and we, the accusers, are but witnesses."

"These men in the war have, from your possessions, become rich out of poverty, and you, poor through them. But it is not the business of the leaders of the people in your misfortunes to lay hands on what is yours, but rather to give their own to you. But we have come to such a state that men who, when we were at peace, were not even able to support themselves, are now paying income taxes and performing liturgies and building fine houses. . . . And you are no longer angry at what they steal, but grateful for what you get, as though they were your paymasters, and not the thieves of your goods."

From the Speech against Ergocles (the friend of Thrasybulus) : "Why should you spare men when you see the fleets that they commanded scattering and going to pieces for lack of funds, and these men, who set sail poor and needy, so quickly become the richest of all the citizens” (§ 2). And yet Lysias knew, when he wrote these words, that few fleets in all the history of the city had done grander service than had this, under the defendants, with Thrasybulus! He says further of these officers, “They enrich themselves and hate you, and they are preparing no longer to obey you, but to rule you, and fearing because of their ill-gotten gains, they are ready to seize strongholds, and to set up an oligarchy, and to do everything to keep you in extreme daily peril” (28. 7). “I beg you to come to your own relief, and much rather to punish the guilty than pity those who are keeping what belongs to the city. For the fines that they will pay will be no money of theirs,—they will simply restore to you your own” (29. 8).

If, in the speech for the defense on the Property of Aristophanes, Lysias found himself working against an unreasoning and lawless public sentiment, he could make no complaint, for he had helped to create it. The speech is full of incidental interest for its glimpses of the more personal affairs of famous men, but its greatest value is for the intimate knowledge which, with the speeches of the earlier group, it gives of the demoralized condition of the democracy.

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

I. Προοίμιον, §§ i–ii.
   No other proem of Lysias is so long or developed in such detail. The reason is to be found in the fact that the speaker is addressing a jury who are thoroughly prejudiced against his case. Nicophemus and Aristophanes are believed to have been guilty of the gravest crimes, and now the defendant is believed to be concealing their property to the damage of the state. The prosecution have said everything possible to intensify this feeling.

   The proem falls into two parts, one (§§ i–6) general, the other (§§ 7–ii) based on the facts peculiar to this case. It is surprising to find that for the first part Lysias has taken a ready-made proem from some book on rhetoric, and used it with slight changes. We discover this fact by comparing §§ i–6 with the proem of Andocides’s speech On the Mysteries, delivered twelve years earlier, and the proem of Isocrates’s speech Περὶ Ἀντιδόσεως (XV), published thirty-four years after that of Lysias. Andocides has divided the section, inserting a passage applicable to his peculiar case, but the two parts agree closely with Lysias’s proem. Isocrates has used a small part of the same material, but much more freely, changing the order and the phraseology, and amplifying the selected parts to fit his own style. The following text gives a comparative view of the proems of Andocides and Lysias:—
Andocides I

1. Τὴν μὲν παρασκευὴν, ὦ ἄνδρες, καὶ τὴν προθυμίαν τῶν ἐχθρῶν τῶν ἐμῶν, ὅτε με κακῶς ποιεῖν ἐκ παντὸς τρόπου καὶ δικαίως καὶ ἀδίκως, ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἐπειδὴ τάξιστα ἀφικόμην εἰς τὴν πόλιν ταυτηνί, σχεδὸν τι πάντες ἐπίστασθε, έγὼ δὲ, ὦ ἄνδρες, δεύσομαι ὑμῶν δίκαια καὶ ὑμῖν τε ῥάδια χαρίζοσθαι καὶ ἐμοὶ ἀξία πολλοῦ τυχεῖν παρ' ὑμῶν.

Here follow four paragraphs applicable to this particular case. The general proem is resumed at § 6:

αὐτῶμαι οὖν ὑμᾶς, ὦ ἄνδρες, ἐννοιαν πλεῖω παρασχέσθαι ἐμοὶ τῷ ἀπολογουμένῳ ἢ τοῖς κατηγόροις,

Cp. Isoc. 15. 18 ὃς ἐστι μὲ γυστον κακὸν διαβολῆ. Lysias goes on to illustrate the statement, while Isocrates amplifies it.

An examination of the matter common to the two writers shows that the borrowed proem was composed as a model for the opening of a defense; it was a plea for a kindly hearing on the ground *(1) that any defendant is at a disadvantage (Andoc. and Lysias); (2) that oftentimes accusations have sooner or later been found to be false (Andoc., Lysias, Isoc.); (3) that the truth or falsity of charges can be learned only by hearing both sides (Andoc., Isoc.); (4) that slander is dangerous (Lysias, Isocrates).¹

In the parts where the three writers use common matter, Isocrates agrees with Andocides rather than with Lysias; we may conclude that Lysias has changed the original more than Andocides has. Lysias’s form is in general shorter and simpler. There is also an occasional happy variation of a word, or of a tense, or of word order:

Andocides

πολλοὺς λόγους ποιεῖσθαι, § 1, δεήσομαι, § 1, χαρίζεσθαι, § 1,
ἐπιβουλεύοντες, § 6,
τὴν ἀπολογίαν ποιοῦμαι, § 6, ἴκικος ἐστιν, §§ 6, 7, ὀπότε, § 7,
πιστοὺς ἤγείσθαι, § 7,

Lysias

λέγειν, § 2.
αἰτήσομαι, § 2.
χαρίσασθαι, § 2.
ἐπιβουλεύοντες, § 3.
ἀγωνιζόμεθα, § 3.
ἴκικος, §§ 3, 5.
ὅτε, § 5.
ἦγείσθαι πιστοὺς, § 5.

Especially interesting are Lysias’s additions designed to serve the ἱθος of his client, who carefully preserves throughout the speech the attitude of a man inexperienced in public life; in § 4 Lysias says, ὅμως πάντας ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι, where Andocides bids them consider; in § 5 Lysias inserts ὥσ ἐγὼ ἀκούω and ἀκοῦω γὰρ ἔγορε, a disclaimer of making statements on his own authority. He also substitutes the simple expression πρὶν ἄν καὶ ἡμεῖς εἴπωμεν, § 5, for the artificial antithesis of Andocides, § 7.

This is the only case in Lysias’s works in which we can discover the use of such a stock proem. We know that the publication of such ready-made proems and epilogues was common. The first rhetoricians gave great attention to these parts of the speech, and gave to them especial ornamentation both of thought and phraseology. It was possible to compose them in such general terms that any one of them would fit a large class of cases. We hear of such collections by Thrasy machus, Antiphon, and Critias, and the Mss. of Demosthenes have preserved to us a large collection of proems of his composition, five of which we find actually used in extant speeches of his.

The second part of our proem (§§ 7–11) is an appeal for kindly hearing, based on the peculiar hardships of the speaker. For the closing words of this, Lysias goes again to his stock proem, as we see by comparing them with later words of Andocides:

Andocides, § 9

II. Πίστευς, Argumentatio, §§ 12–54.

Lysias omits the formal Πρόθεσις, and proceeds at once to the narrative (§ 12) that is to form the basis of his first argument.

His purpose is first to dispel the idea that the defendant's father had concealed any of the property. Apparently the prosecution had made no specific charges, and the refutation must rest entirely upon probabilities. He makes a plausible argument (A and B, §§ 12–20), but one which has less value for its own purpose than for giving such a picture of Aristophanes that the jury will be prepared for the next claim, and the one which forms the real foundation of the case, i.e. that Aristophanes had little property (C, §§ 21–27). The facts cited to prove this are pertinent and convincing. Yet Lysias knows how little weight such proof will have with a prejudiced jury. He therefore addresses himself to the removal of that prejudice by an elaborate argument (D, §§ 28–54), based partly on the facts of this case, and still more on the notorious instances of mistaken popular judgment in similar cases. It is an instance of the wisdom of the skilled pleader, who sees that logic is by no means sufficient with a popular jury, but that the appeal must take great account of prejudice.

III. Επιλογος, Peroratio, §§ 55–64.

The recapitulation is of the briefest, covering only the central points of the positive argument, and is followed by an appeal to the jury, based on the good character of the defendant and his father, and their services to the city. But here Lysias turns from this use of the facts, so common in epilogues, and returns to argumentation, drawing from the facts of their life the conclusion of the improbability of the crime charged against them (the common argument Probabile ex vita). The final appeal is brief and simple.

The style of the whole speech is as simple as its framework. We can find hardly a trace of the artificial "figures" of rhetoric. Even antithesis, which Lysias often uses to excess, and nearly always in abundance, is almost excluded. The sentences are usually simple and non-periodic. In every particular Lysias has fitted the speech to the man: the quiet, retiring, sincere gentleman. This adaptation of the language to the personality of the speaker (ἡθος) is perfected by delicate touches here and there. He reminds us of his inexperience in court, and of his fear under the pressing danger (§§ 2, 3, 53). He avoids putting forward his own knowledge or experience, but says, ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκούω, ἀκούω γὰρ ἐγώγη (§ 5), ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκούω (§ 14), ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκήκοα (§ 19), ἀκήκοα γὰρ ἐμώγη (§ 45), φασὶ δὲ (§ 53). His only boasting is of the quietness of his life, his filial obedience, and the good will of his neighbors (all condensed into four lines, § 55). His public service as trierarch comes in only incidentally, as does the fact of his scrupulous protection of the state's property confiscated unjustly. If we compare all this with the personality of Mantitheus (see p. 135 f.), we see the grounds on which Lysias is regarded as a master of ἡθοποιία. But here, as in other speeches (cp. p. 29), other personalities beside those of the speaker are made to stand out. We feel that we know Aristophanes: ambitious, restless, hopeful, hurrying from one enterprise to another, eager to have a part in large movements; and clearest of all, the original defendant, the speaker's father: a gentleman of the old school; arranging for his children marriages that should bring honor rather than gold to the family, and connect them with old families and men of character (§§ 12-17); the trusted friend of the great Conon (§ 12); ready to loan all his ready money to help his son-in-law in his enterprise (§ 22); bearing large burdens for the city beyond the requirements of the law, yet seeking no office (§§ 56-58); the generous friend and neighbor (§ 59); in a life of seventy years free from all charge of love of money, and even in the year of his death, in his old age, contributing to the city in the most costly service (§ 62), and finally leaving the small fortune of two talents. And this characterization of the man is the more telling in that many of the particulars are brought out only incidentally.

But these personal portraits are not simply works of art; they are vitally related to the plea itself. More powerful than any argument of the speech is the feeling of the hearer that a man like Aristophanes may well be believed to have died poor; that a man like the speaker is indeed to be pitied, forced into court to plead for all that he has, and by no possible fault of his own; and that a man like his father would never have committed the crime with which he was charged.¹

And here lies much of the power of Lysias. We often feel that his arguments are inconclusive; he fails to appeal strongly to the passions; in a case like this, where strong appeal might be made to our pity for the widow and little children, he seems cold. But the personality of the speaker and his friends is so real and their charm so irresistible, that at the close we find ourselves on their side.

or clauses which contain or imply a comparison often take καί in one or both members to emphasize their mutual relation. We can in English use also in the first member only; the Greek oftener uses it in the second: (A) καί in both members; here (Crit. N.) and § 36.
(B) καί in the first member, 24.
25. (C) καί in the second mem-

6 μάλιστα δὲ τούτο ἔχοι ἃν τις ἰδεῖν, ὅταν πολλοὶ ἐπὶ τῇ αὐτῇ αἰτίᾳ εἰς ἄγωνα καταστῶσιν. ὃς γὰρ ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ οἱ τελευταῖοι κρινόμενοι στόλονται: πεπαυμένοι γὰρ τῆς ὀργῆς αὐτῶν ἀκρασθε, καὶ τοὺς ἐλέγχους ἢδη ἐθέλοντες ἀποδέχεσθε.

7 Ἐνθυμεῖσθε οὖν ὅτι Νικόφημος καὶ Ἀριστοφάνης ἀκριτοὶ ἀπέθανον, πρὶν παραγενέσθαι τινὰ αὐτοῖς

5. ὅτε: causal. — ὡς ἐγώ ἄκοιω: to give the impression that he has no personal experience of proceedings in the courts. So ἄκοιω γὰρ ἐγώγη below. — πάντων ... διαβολή: cp. Herod. 7. 10 διαβολή γὰρ ἐστὶ δεινότατον κτλ. Isoc. 15. 18 ὃς ἐστὶ μέγιστον κακὸν διαβολή: τί γὰρ ἃν γένοιτο ταύτης κακουργότερον κτλ. Both Herodotus and Isocrates proceed to give a short disquisition on the evils of slander. Such neat characterizations by way of praise (ἐγκώμια) or blame (ψόγοι) were favorite exercises of the sophists and rhetoricians. — δεινότατον: a common Greek construction, but Lysias uses it in this passage only; HA. 617; G. 925; B. 423; Gl. 544.

6. ὃς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ: as a rule. Lysias uses the expression here only.

7. οὖν: with transitional force. οὖν was originally a confirmative adverb, strengthening an assertion or question, in view of something just said. From this grew its use as a mere particle of transition, and its common post-Homeric use as an illative conjunction = therefore. Lysias has the three uses: (A) As a particle of emphasis, 12. 36, 14. 18, 1. 49. (B) As a particle of transition (Eng. now), 19. 7, 19. 22. For this he ordinarily uses μὲν οὖν or τοιῶν (see on 12. 3). (C) Illative = therefore 19. 1, 19. 2, 19. 3, and constantly. — ἀκριτοὶ: cp. on 12. 17. The word does not necessarily mean “without trial,” but may mean without full process as guaranteed by the constitution.—πρὶν παραγενέσθαι κτλ.: before the arrival of any one (of their friends) to hear their examination; or without the presence of any one (of their friends) at their examination (for the second use of πρὶν cp. πρὶν εἴπεῖν 12. 17 in a similar connection). The first interpretation would imply that the examination and execution took place in Cyprus; the second implies nothing as to the place. In either case the implication is that the men had an examination of some sort. See Introd. p. 161 n. 1.—γεγένηται, ἐστερημέναι: perfect, because the separate sad events of the past (ἀπέθανον, εἶδεν, ἀπέδωκεν) are now gathered up in the summary συμφορά, and regarded as a standing illustration of the fact that “slander is the worst of all things” (§ 5).

8. ταῦτα μὲν ἔσω: this (but not the other abuses). See on ἐμὲ μὲν 12. 8.—παρὰ τοὺς νόμους: referring to the fact that Nicophemus and Aristophanes were put to death ἄκριτοι (§ 7). The confiscation of property was often added to a death sentence. In this case it appears that the confiscation was by a separate decree; see Introd. p. 161 n. 1.—τοῦ πάππου: their mother’s father, against whose estate the present suit is brought.

9. ἥμεῖς: the widow of Aristophanes, her brother (the speaker), and her sister (the wife of one Philomelus, § 15).—ἐστερημένοι: on the ἐπαναφορά, see App. § 57. 5.—κηδεστῶν: Aristophanes and Nicophemus.—προικός: the dowry of forty minae (§ 15) which the speaker’s sister brought to Aristophanes, and which should, at his death, have been returned to her father, ought now to be available for her support and that of her little children. 1n the confiscation of Aristophanes’s property even this dowry had been included; cp. on § 32, and on 12. 36. — παιδάρια: the diminutive touches the sympathy of the jury. — ἐκ τοῦ δικαίου: a common expression, arising from a deeper thought than that of mere manner (δικαίως); justice is thought of as the source and starting point of the prosperity. Cp. 24. 5 ἐκ τῆς τέχνης εἰσπορίαν.—εἰς αὐτόν: see on εἰς τὰς ναῦς § 21 (C). — διpλάσια: in § 59 the sum is reckoned as 9½ t. The present estate is therefore estimated at something more than 4 t. See further on §§ 61 and 62. — ὡς . . . παρεγεγόρην: as he often computed in my presence. Note that ὡς, while serving to connect the whole clause, modifies λογιζομένων only. Cp. οἷς in 25. 27. On the tense of παρεγεγόρην see on ψηθομῆν 16. 20.

10. προκαταγχυνώσκετε: προ-, in advance, i.e. πρὶν ἄν καὶ ἤμέις εἰπωμέν (§ 5). — τοῦ δαπανώντος: case, HA. 752 a; G. 1123; B. 370; Gl. 514 a. For the tense of δαπανώντος see on ἀνωμένου 12. 32. — εἰς αὐτόν, εἰς ἡδονάς: see on εἰς τὰς ναῦς § 21 (C) and (B). — ὑμῖν: for the construction see Crit. Note.

12 Πρῶτον μὲν οὖν, ὃ τρόπῳ κηδεσταί ἡμῖν ἐγένοντο, τοδιδάξω ὑμᾶς. στρατηγών γάρ Κόνων περὶ Πελοπόν-

— πρὸς δόξαν . . . καὶ σπάνιν: the general belief that Nicophemus was a rich man, and the present scarcity of money in the city treasury, are two facts which favor the prosecution, and in the face of which (πρὸς) the speaker must make his defense. See Introd. p. 164.—ὑπαρχόντων: force, see on ὑπάρχει 12. 23.—πάση τέχνη καὶ μηχανή: a comparison with § 53 shows that these words are to be connected with ἀκροασμένους ψηφίσασθαι, and not with δέομαι.

12. ὃ τρόπῳ: the relative for the indefinite relative, see on οὖς 25. 7.—γάρ: explicative γάρ. The original use of γάρ (a combination of γέ and ἀρα) was that of a confirmative adverb, giving a tone of assurance. From its frequent use in clauses which, though coordinate, really gave the ground or cause of what preceded, was developed its force as denoting cause or reason. We see a clear effect of this origin of causal γάρ, in the fact that even the fully developed γάρ clause is still treated as coordinate, not subordinate as in English (see on πολλῶν γάρ εἰπορήσειν § 25). Lysias has the following uses: (A) γάρ confirmative (the original force), 26. 7 ἐγὼ μὲν γάρ οὖν ἄν οἴμαι I certainly think he would not. (B) γάρ of the cause or reason of an action, or the reason of a statement; so used constantly. (C) γάρ explicative. (1) The γάρ clause proceeds to give in full what was promised in a general statement, as in our passage; so 12. 2, 12. 6, 12. 19, 12. 64, 16. 4, 16. 6, 16. 13, 19. 25, 19. 50, 19. 55, 24. 4, 32. 24. (2) Sometimes the γάρ clause introduces a new point in the discussion without any preceding general

occasion, before the close of the Peloponnesian War. — ἀδελφὴν:
this sister was at that time a widow, having been the wife of Phaedrus (§ 15). — ὑπὶ: Aristophanes. For the form see on 12. 34.

13. ἐν γε: γε, emphasizing a prepositional phrase, stands regularly after the preposition (so § 49, ὑπὸ γε ἐκείνων). Note that γε three lines below follows the conjunction, thus emphasizing the whole clause rather than χρημάτων alone.
— τῷ τότε χρόνῳ: Lysias wisely avoids discussing the question of the guilt or innocence of the two men, contenting himself with the invidious word διαβολήν below.— ἀλλ' ὅτε: but at a time when.— ἀν ἥξιωσε: potential (hypothetical) indicative, HA. 858; G. 1335;
B. 565; Gl. 467 c; GMT. 243–5;
GS. 430. Cp. §§ 18, 24, 42; 25.
12, 25, 27.

14. παρόν: see on 12. 30.—
μετά: μετά is commonly used with gen. of personal words only. With material words Lysias uses it only here and in 4. 7, 32. 16, 34. 4, Fr.
50 (Bury, Class. Rev. 7. 395). — οὐδὲν ἐπιφερομένην: in speaking of the dowry a bride is said ἐπιφέρεσθαι, her father or guardian ἐπι-δοῦναι (cp. § 15; 16. 10, 32. 6).—
Ξενοφῶντος: not the Xenophon of the Anabasis (the son of Gryllus), but a general in the Peloponnesian War, who with two colleagues received the surrender of Potidaea in 430/29, and died the next year in battle before Spartolus on the Chalcidic peninsula (Thuc. 2. 70, 79). The Euripides mentioned as his father was not the poet.—αὐτὸν: for the difference between the Greek and the English idiom see on αὐτοῖς (before χάριν) 25. 11.—ὡς ἕνω ἀκοῦω: the speaker, in his character of the simple and modest citizen, would give the impression of not being exactly informed on matters of political history, and of not dwelling too much upon his maternal grandfather's honorable career. Cp. p. 174.

15. πᾶν πλουσίων: so this speaker says πολλὴν πάνυ (§ 16), πᾶν ἐπιθυμη (§ 30), πᾶν πολλά (§ 48), o'd πᾶν θαυμάζω (§ 49). πᾶν appears nowhere else in Lysias except in 24. 15 and in the doubtful fragment 61. It would seem therefore that Lysias in talking with his client noticed the young man's fondness for this very, and so gave a touch of naturalness to his speech by letting him use his favorite word repeatedly. Compare with this the fact that the intensive γε is used in this speech seven times, while in XII, written for his own delivery, Lysias uses it only three times, though that speech is a third longer. In XXXI, written for a client, γε appears eleven times, though the speech is only a third as long as XII. Our speech also contains three of the four instances of the emphatic ἀλλὰ μὴν to be found in Lysias. Cp. on ᾿ήγοιμαι 25. 2. —Φιλομήλῳ: the family was old and honored. That Philomelus was not a poor man is evident from several inscriptions which preserve his name as trierarch.—βελτίω ἢ πλουσιώτερον: more honorable than rich. "When two adjectives or adverbs are compared ἦ is always used, and both stand in the comparative degree." B. 426 n. 3; cp. HA. 645. So in Latin: verior quam gratior more true than agreeable, Livy 22. 38.—τὴν δὲ: see on ἄδελφην § 12.
That this was the daughter who afterward became the wife of Aristophanes is clear from § 17, where we learn that there were only two daughters. — Φαίδρω: the Phaedrus whom we know through Plato as a young friend of Socrates (Sympos. 176 D), one of the group who listened to the Sophist Hippias (Prot. 315 C), and the friend and enthusiastic admirer of Lysias, deliberately portrayed in Plato’s Phaedrus. It was not strange that when the proposition was made to confiscate the property of Aristophanes (cp. p. 161 N. 1), his widow turned for help to the friend of her first husband, now at the height of his fame as an advocate, nor that when the present suit against her father’s estate came on Lysias again wrote the defense. — τετταράκοντα μνᾶς: see on 16. 10.

— κατ’: i.e. after the death of Phae- drus. For εἶτα see on 12. 26. — Ἀριστοφάνει τὸ ἱσον: = Ἀριστοφά- νεῖ εἴδωκεν, τὸ ἱσον ἐπίδοις. The dat. with ἐπίδοις would be used only of the name of the bride, as in § 17 τῶν θυγατέρων ἐπέ- δωκε.

16. ἔξον: cp. παρὸν § 14. — ὡστε . . . εἴδεναι: one of the less common expressions of purpose, representing it as the inten- ded result, like the English “so as to”; HA. 953 a; G. 1452; B. 595 n.; Gl. 566 b. — κοσμίους: see on κοσμίους 12. 20. — ἀπέθανεν: after the battle of Aegospotami the Spartans put to death their Athenian pris- oners (Xen. Hell. 2. 1. 32), 3000 in number (Plut. Lysander XI). — ἡ ναυμαχία: see on 12. 43.
10. ο στείνειν δός οὐχ ἕνεκα χρημάτων τούτως κηδεστής ἔγένετο;
18. Ἀλλὰ μὴν ὁ γε Ἀριστοφάνης ἤδη ἔχων τὴν γυναῖκα ὅπι πολλοῖς ἄν μᾶλλον ἔχρητο ὅ τῷ ἐμῷ πατρί, ῥάδιον γυναῖ. ἤ τε γὰρ ἡλικία πολὺ διάφορος, ἤ τε φύσις ἔτι πλέον· ἐκείνῳ μὲν γὰρ ἄρκοι ἣν τὰ ἐαυτοῦ πράττειν, Ἀριστοφάνης δὲ οὐ μόνον τῶν ἰδίων ἄλλα καὶ τῶν κοινῶν ἐβούλετο ἐπιμελεῖσθαι, καὶ εἴ τι ἦν αὐτῷ ἀργύριον, ἀνήλωσεν ἐπιθυμῶν τιμᾶσθαι. γνώστεσθε δὲ ὅτι ἀληθῆ λέγω ἔξι αὐτῶν ὧν ἐκεῖνος ἔπραττε.

19. τοῦτον μὲν γὰρ Βουλομένου Κόνωνος πέμπτεν τωδὲ εἰς Σικελίαν, ὕχετο ὑποστάς μετὰ Εὐνόμου, Διονυσίου

17. ἕνεκα χρημάτων: ἕνεκα is regularly placed after its object. Lysias places it before its object in two other passages only, ἕνεκα πόρυς ἀνθρώπου 4. 9, and ἕνεκα χρημάτων 24. 2. It may also stand after a modifier of the genitive, as in 7. 40 τοῦτον ἕνεκα τοῦ κυδίνου, and 12. 98 μικρῶν ἄν ἕνεκα συμβολαίων.

18. ἄν . . . ἔχρητο: potential indic.; see on ἄν ἡξίωσε § 13.—καὶ εἶ: accidental juxtaposition of the particles (so in 25. 13, 32. 13), not the καὶ εἶ of 16. 2.—ἀνήλωσεν: note that the condition and conclusion are in the "particular" form (the conclusion in the summary aorist), 'he spent the property that he had'; in the next sentence the detailed description of this conduct is introduced by the imperfect ἔπραττε.

19. ὕχετο ὑποστάς: he undertook (the service) and went.—Εὐνόμου: Isocrates (15. 93, 94) mentions Eunomus first in a group of men who have been followers of his "from youth to old age," all of whom the city had honored with golden crowns, and who had spent of their private fortunes generously for the city. Xenophon’s account (Hell. 5. 1. 5, 9) of his failure as a naval commander not long before this speech was delivered gives a less favorable impression of his ability; he was easily entrapped by the Spartan commander, and lost four of his little fleet of thirteen ships.—Διονυσίου: this is Sauppe’s conjecture for Λυσίον of the Ms.; for the important question as to Lysias involved in this reading, see Crit.
Note. Early in 393 a complimentary decree had been passed in honor of Dionysius and his brothers (Köhler, Hermes III. 156 ff.). — τὸ πλῆθος: see on 12. 42. — ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκῆκοι: the same modest disclaimer of political knowledge as in § 14 ὡς ἐγὼ ἀκῶν. As the speaker is now a man of thirty (§ 55), he was a boy of fourteen at the time of the Return.— τῶν ἐν Πειραιεῖ: men of the Piraeus party, i.e. the democrats; cp. 12. 55.

20. τοῦ πλοῦ: case, HA. 729 b; G. 1085. 2; B. 349. Here πείσαι takes the place of the common objective genitive with ἐλπίς; cp. § 53 ἐλπίς οἰδεμία σωτηρίας; 25. 21 ἐλπίδας εὗχετε τῆς καθοδοῦν.— κηδεστὴ: by marrying one of the daughters of Evagoras. Dionysius was already living with two wives, Doris, an Italian, and Aristomache, a Syracusan (Diodor. 14. 44). In the choice of both he had been governed by political considerations. — ὑπαρχόντων: force, see on ὑπάρξει 12. 23. — πρὸς τὴν θάλατταν: probably it was a winter voyage. Lysias always uses πρὸς and acc. with κίνδυνος and κινδυνεύειν where the English uses either in the face of or from. So in 14. 15, 15. 12, 16. 12, 16. 18.— ἐπείσαν: with the mention of the difficulties under which the ambassadors were laboring during their mission we have the imperfect, ἐπραττον, but the summary statement of the result is in the aorist, ἐπείσαν. — παρεσκεύαστο: tense, see Crit. Note.

21. οἱ πρέσβεις: for these events see Introd. p. 160 f. — ἔπι: one of Lysias’s two instances of τρυήρεις αὐτοῦς ἔδωτε καὶ τάλλα ἔψηφίσασθε, ἀργυρίον δὲ εἰς τὸν ἀπόστολον ἦπόρουν. ὅλιγα μὲν γὰρ ἡλθον ἐχοντες χρήματα, πολλῶν δὲ προσεδήθησαν· οὐ γὰρ μόνον τοὺς εἰς τὰς νοῦς, ἀλλὰ καὶ πελταστὰς ἐμισθώσαντο καὶ ὅπλα ἐπρίαντο. Ἀριστοφάνης οὖν τῶν χρημάτων τὰ μὲν πλείστα αὐτὸς παρέσχεν· ἐπειδὴ δὲ οὐχ ἴκανα ἦν, τοὺς φίλους ἐπευθεὶς δεόμενος καὶ ἐγγυώμενος, καὶ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τοῦ ὄμοπατρίου ἀποκειμένας παρ’ αὐτῷ τετταράκοντα μνᾶς ἀπορῶν κατεχρῆσαι. τῇ δὲ προτεραίᾳ ἢ ἀνήγετο, εἰσελθὼν ὡς τὸν πατέρα τὸν ἐμὸν ἐκέλευσε χρῆσαι ὅ τι εἰ ἄργυριον. προσδεῖν γὰρ ἐφη πρὸς τὸν μισθὸν τοῖς πελτασταῖς. ἤσαν ἐπὶ with accus. to denote purpose; see on εἰς σωτηρίαν 12. 14. — τάλλα: the alliance of which this expedition was the result (Xen. Hell. 4. 8. 24). — ἦπόρουν: Athens furnished ships equipped by her own trierarchs (cp. § 25), but Evagoras had probably counted on her supplying crews and fighting-men; his ambassadors had not brought money enough to meet the unexpected expense of hiring them. — εἰς τὰς νοῦς: from the use of εἰς to denote local destination comes its frequent use to express figurative destination, passing over to the full idea of purpose (see on 12. 14). Closely connected with the ideas of destination and of purpose is the frequent use of εἰς governing the name of the person or thing for which or upon which expenditure is made. (A) Figurative destination, this passage, εἰς τὸν ἀπόστολον above, and § 39. (B) Expenditure for or upon an object, §§ 10, 25, 43; 32. 9, 32. 21, 32. 22. (C) Expenditure upon a person, §§ 9, 10, 56, 62; 25. 17, 32. 20. 22. οὖν: see on § 7 (B). — ἐπευθεὶς: conative impf., see on ἐπευθεῖν 12. 58 (contrast πέσατι and ἐπευθαν § 20). That he succeeded in part is evident from § 24. — τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ τοῦ ὄμοπατρίου: his half-brother. For the Greek for own brother see 32. 4. — παρ’ αὐτῷ: with him = in his care. So in §§ 36, 48; 32. 16. — ὡς: see on 16. 4. — πρὸς τὸν μισθὸν: πρὸς rather than the usual εἰς, from the influence of πρὸς- in προσδεῖν.
Ρήματος. Τόν μέν μαρτύρων ἄκοιντε, οὐ μόνον ὅτι ἔχρησαν τὸ ἀργύριον ἐκείνου δεθέντος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁτι

For the only other instance in Lysias of πρός in a purpose phrase see on § 61 and cp. on εἰς σωτηρίαν 12. 14. — ἐνδον: in the house, "by us," cp. on § 47.

23. ὁντα, ἡκούσων: for correlation of gen. abs. with participles in other construction see on προτούσις κτλ. 12. 69. — πατρός: the father was in Cyprus with Evagoras. — μηδενός: this form rather than οὐδενός from the idea of promising implied in ἐπιστολῶν. For the use of μή with fut. infin. with words of this class see H.A. 1024 (last sentence) and 948 a; G. 1496 and 1286; B. 549. 2; Gl. 579 a. — ἀπορήσεων: Aristophanes's father assured him that on his arrival at Cyprus Evagoras would more than repay him for all advances that he might make for the equipment of the expedition. — ἐκ Κύπρου: see Crit. Note. — αὐν: with both ὑπολιπέσθαι and χαρίσασθαι. The construction is that of ind. disc. for the potential indic. noted on αὖν ἥξιοσε § 13. — τῶν ὄντων, . . . πάντα: his own property, . . . all the cost of the expedition. — ἀλλὰ οὐκ: but (would) not rather. — Εὐνομον: called to acknowledge his testimony as to the facts of §§ 19 and 20.
24. ἀπειλήφασιν: the perfect, because the question at issue is where the money now is which Aristophanes is supposed to have had at his death. The speaker shows that this part of it is now back in the hands of the men who loaned it to him. — ἐπὶ τῆς τριήμερος: probably one of the two state dispatch boats, the Paralus or the Salaminia, was sent to carry Aristophanes in advance of the fleet on his mission to Cyprus, and immediately brought back the money from Evagoras with which to repay the loans that had been made in his service. — μὲν οὖν: force, see on 12. 3 (C). — ἄν ἐφεισάτο: cp. on ἄν ἡξίωσεν § 13, and ὑπολιπέσθαι ἄν § 23.

25. δὲ: the antecedent is the γάρ clause. See on § 33, and cp. 32. 24. — Δῆμος: Aristophanes speaks of this Demus as Δῆμος καλός (Wasps 98). Plato has his joke on the name when he says that Callicles is lover of two at once, τοῦ τε Ἀθηναίων δήμος καὶ τοῦ Πυριλάμπους (Gorg. 481 D). The father, Pyrilampus, was, according to Plato (Charm. 158 A), among the most honored of all who were sent from time to time to negotiate with the king of Persia. It is probable that this gold cup was given to him and inherited by Demus, together with his father’s ξενία. Such cups, doubtless bearing some royal sign, were common gifts of the Great King, intended to serve as a token of his confidence in the bearer and his desire that he be helped by Persian officials in all the satrapies. The possession of such a token would be of especial value to Aristophanes on his mission to Asia. — γάρ: γάρ explicative, see on § 12. — τριήμερος: in the fleet of ten triremes which was to follow as soon as possible. We learn from Xenophon (Hell. 4. 8. 24) that the fleet was overtaken on the voyage by the Spartans and every trireme captured. — εἰς Κύπρον: εἰς of 'destination,' see on εἰς τὰς ναὸς § 21. — ὑποθήσει κτλ.: the text here is doubtful (see Crit. Note), but the proposition of Demus certainly was that Aristophanes loan him sixteen minae to help him fit out his trireme, and take the cup as security. The offer of 25% on the short loan was a tempting one (the ordinary rate was 12% to 18% per annum).

— εἰς τὴν τριπαρχίαν: see on εἰς τὰς ναὸς § 21 (B). — πολλῶν γὰρ εὐπορήσειν: the Greek does not treat a γὰρ clause as fully subordinate, hence the ind. disc. carries the infin. construction to εὐπορήσειν. See on § 12.

26. ἀκούσαν, δεομένου: cp. on οὐντα, ἡκουσῶν § 23. — εἴναι: = ἔξειναι. — καὶ προσδεδανεῖσθαι: he had not only spent all of his own money, but had also borrowed. For the middle see HA. 816. 7; G. 1245; B. 506. Cp. ἐδανεῖσατο 12. 59. — τοῖς ξένοις: the mercenaries mentioned in § 21. — ἄνθρωπων: part. gen. with ἦδιστα, HA. 756, 755 b; G. 1088; B. 355. 1; Gl. 507 d. Cp. μόνος ἄνθρωπων 24. 9. ἦδιστα, reënforced by ἄνθρωπων (see L. & S. ἄνθρωπων 3 b) and followed by εὐθÙs instantly, emphasizes the eagerness with which Aristophanes would have accepted the offer. — ἂν ἄγεων καὶ χαρίσαις: for with the utmost pleasure (he said) he would instantly have taken that security with him and have done us the favor. For the occasional use of the infin. in ind. disc. even in a subordinate clause see HA. 947 a; G. 1524; B. 671 n.; GMT. 755. This is the only instance of the construction in Lysias. The direct form would be ἦδιστ’ ἂν

For this rare use of the aorist indic. in an unreal apodosis belonging to time immediately future see 12. 34 Crit. Note. But another explanation is possible; it may be that the ἐπειδὴ clause is incorporated into the ind. disc. only so far as to throw its verbs into the infin., otherwise leaving the expression as it would be uttered by the narrator, not by the original speaker: the narrator would say ἡδιστ' ἄν ἤγε τε ... καὶ ἐχαρίσαμοι most gladly would he have carried that security with him and have done us the favor. In support of the second explanation is the ἐκείνῳ (which implies the point of view of the narrator); cp. on ἠκκλησιάζετε 12. 73. For analogous cases of incomplete incorporation of subord. clauses in ind. disc. see GMT. 674. 2, 3.

Ἄρμανοῦντι: a true locative, HA. 783 b; G. 1197; B. 383; Gl. 527 a. Rhamnus was an Attic deme on the east coast, north of Marathon. 29. τέταρσιν: between the battle of Cnidus (394) and the mission to Cyprus, see Introd. p. 161 N. I.— πρῶτον μὴ ὑπαρχοῦσης οἰκίας: assuming that (μὴ) he had no property at the beginning. See on ὑπάρχει 12. 23. For μη see on μητὲ 12. 68 (A).— τραγῳδοῖς: see on 24. 9.— χορηγῆσαι: the sums spent in this and the other services are given in § 42.— πατρός: the father being absent on public service.— συνεχῶς: by law any one liturgy fell upon a citizen not oftener than every other year; the trierarchy (at any rate in the middle of the fourth century), not oftener than one year in three (Isae. 7. 38). But public-spirited citizens sometimes volunteered for continuous service (so the speaker of XXI says that he served as trierarch for a period of seven years (21. 2)).— τριηροῦ γιγαντιαί: note the ‘complexive’ aorist in this definite and summary statement of a “continued act”; see on ἄγκησε 12. 4.— οἰκίαν: that the house of a man reputed to be rich was worth only $900 is another indication of the simplicity of life in Athens (see on 32. 23) and of the great purchasing power of money there.— γῆς: the land cost (in round numbers) 250 minae (§ 42, land and house cost “more than 5 t.” = 300 minae +). Reckoning the plethron as = .087 hekt. (Nissen), we have 65 acres at about $70 an acre. This is the only passage in Greek authors which, by giving both the contents and the price of a piece of land, enables us to reckon land value. As we know neither the situation

HA. 1035 a; G. 1504 (where the passage is mis-translated after Reiske). — δεδημευμένων: sc. τῶν κρήματος from τὰ κρήματα above. — ἀπεφαίνετο; i.e. when the officers made their inventory. — πλεῖν: form, see on 32. 20. — χιλίων δραχμῶν: a further indication of the simplicity of life and the high purchasing power of money. — οὐδένωσ: for the case cp. on ὅμων 12. 40 and ἦς 12. 83. 32. πρότερον: in the preliminary steps of the case. — συνδικούς: see on 16. 7. had jurisdiction in cases of confiscation in general. The preliminary hearing and the presidency at the trial would rest with these σύντροφοι (see App. § 9). We find no mention of such a board after this date.—πίστιν: by the most solemn oath. Cp. 12. 10, 32. 13.

—ἐνοφείλεσθαι: rests as a claim (upon the confiscated property). The dowry was never looked upon as the absolute property of the husband, but as held in trust for the wife; it could not therefore be confiscated with the husband’s estate; cp. on καὶ τοὺς παίδας 12. 36, and see Gardner and Jevons, Greek Antiquities, p. 555 ff.—ἐπτὰ μῦνας: the loan mentioned in § 22.

33. ἐκεῖνων: Aristophanes and his father. The speaker unconsciously passes from the hypothetical case (ἀνθρωποί) to his own.—δ... δεινότατον: the construction is, δὲ πάντων δεινότατον (ἐστίν) | (τούτ’ ἔστιν) | ὑποδείκνυσθαι καὶ τρέφειν. A simpler expression is that of Plato’s Apology 41 b καὶ δὴ τὸ μέγιστον | (τούτ’ ἔστιν) | ἐξετάζοντα διά- γειν; Less close is the connection where the relative precedes a clause with a finite verb, as in 32. 24 δὲ πάντων δεινότατον (ἐστίν), δὲ ἄνδρες δικασταὶ γάρ... λελόγισται. So in 19. 25. Cp. HA. 1009 a.—παίδα πολλὰ: a lot of little children is something of an exaggeration for the παιδάρια τρία of § 9.—μηδέ: see on μήτε 12. 68 (B).

34. πρὸς θεῶν Ὀλυμπίων: the only form of oath used by Lysias, and this only here and in § 54, and in the earnest closing appeal to the jury in 13. 95. This avoidance of the common oaths of every-day impassioned speech is as fitting to the calm and simple style of Lysias as is their constant use to the vehement style of Demosthenes. — γάρ: force, see on § 12 (C) (2).
— Τιμοθέω τῷ Κόνωνος: Conon had died in Cyprus not long before this. Because of his services to the king of Persia, and later to Evagoras of Cyprus, he had been believed to be enormously rich. His son, Timotheus, was now already well known in the city, although he did not enter upon his career of political leadership until some years later. — τέτταρα τάλαντα: we conclude that the sale of Aristophanes’s property had yielded about this sum to the state.

— ἀπολέσθαι: financial ‘ruin’; so in § 45. — ὅτι οὐδὲ πολλοστὸν κτλ.: because his property was found to be not even the smallest part of what you had supposed. πολλοστὸν μέρος τῆς δόξης is perfectly intelligible, if less logical than the equivalent expression in § 39 πολλοστὸν μέρος ἢν τὰ χρήματα ὃν οὐμεῖς προσεδοκᾶτε.

35. τοῦτο: the participial phrases stand in apposition with τοῦτο, an uncommon construction. See Crit. Note. Cp. Xen. Anab. 7. 2. 4 ἔχαρε ταῦτα ἄκουσιν διαφθειρόμενον τὸ στράτευμα. — τῶν ὀφελείων: it is assumed as a matter of course that the officers were enriching themselves. See p. 164.
36. ταυτά γνώναι: this ‘common resolution’ of Conon and Nicophemus is explained by the infin. clauses, ἰκανά μὲν ... καταλιπεῖν: τὰ δὲ ἀλλὰ παρ᾽ αὐτοῖς ἔχειν: ἦν γὰρ Κόνωνι μὲν ὦς ἐν Κύπρῳ καὶ γυνῇ, Νικοφήμῳ δὲ γυνῇ καὶ θυγάτηρ, ἤγοντο δὲ καὶ τὰ ἐκεῖ ὁμοίως σφήνων εἶναι σὰ ὠσπέρ καὶ τὰ ἐνθάδε. 37 πρὸς δὲ τούτους ἐνθυμεῖσθε ὅτι καὶ εἰ τις μὴ κτησάμενος ἀλλὰ παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς παραλαβῶν τοῖς παισί διένεμεν, οὐκ ἐλάχιστα ἢν αὐτῶ ὑπέληπτε. Βουλοῦνται γὰρ πάντες ὑπὸ τῶν παῖδων θεραπεύεσθαι ἐξοντες χρήματα μάλλον ἢ ἐκείνων δεῖσθαι ἀποροῦντες.

38 Νῦν τοῖνυν εἰ δημεύσατε τὰ τοῦ Τιμοθέου, — ὅ μὴ γένοιτο, εἰ μὴ τι μέλλει μέγα ἀγαθὸν ἐσεθαί τῇ πόλει —, ἐλάττω δὲ εὖ αὐτῶν λάβοιτ᾿ ἢ ἄ ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοφάνους γεγένηται, τούτον ἑνέκα ἀν ἥξιοῦτε τοὺς ἀναγκαῖους ἐξοντες. property was found in Aristophanes's estate furnishes no ground for suspicion.’ On καὶ εἰ see on 16. 2. — μὴ: see on μὴτε 12. 68 (B). — θεραπεύεσθαι: a son whose father still keeps the property in his own control will presumably be most attentive to him.

38. εἰ μὴ τι κτλ.: i.e. unless the public good shall require it, as punishment for some crime on his part. The sentiment is quite in keeping with the deference which an Athenian pleader in court would show toward the supreme interests and will of the sovereign people. — ἀν ἥξιοῦτε: the case which was thought of at first as supposable (εἰ δημεύσατε, λάβοιτε) is, as the sentence proceeds, treated as impossible (ἀν ἦσιν, the “contrary to fact” construction).

39. ἐκόσ: sc. ἄμα τοῦτ’ ἄν ἀξίων.—else: see on εἰς τὰς ναύς § 21 (A).—ἀνάθημα: votive offerings to Athena, probably to be placed on the Acropolis. Conon had already dedicated a golden crown in memory of the battle of Cnidus, bearing the inscription Κόων ἀπ’ τῆς ναυμαχίας τῆς πρὸς Δακεδαμονίους (Dem. 22. 72).

40. τῷ βεί: Timotheus. What provision was made for the son of the Cyprian wife (§ 36), if he was still living, does not appear.

Timotheus was already beginning to set an example of greater luxury than that of the older generation. Aristophanes in the Plutus (388 b.c.) speaks of his house as a πύργος (v. 180).

41. ἐν τῇ νόσῳ...: important for our knowledge of Conon’s death (cp. διέθετο ἐν Κύπρῳ § 39), for from a statement of Isocrates (ἐπὶ θανάτῳ συλλαβεῖν 4. 154) we should naturally, though not necessarily, infer that Conon was put to death by the Persians.—ἐδ φρονῶν: a technical term in Attic law, corresponding to the English “being of sound mind.”
42. The following details are valuable as showing something of the cost of public services rendered, partly voluntarily, and partly under compulsion, by the wealthy Athenians. The facts have been more briefly stated in § 29. — más: in his two services as choragus. For full description of these duties see Haigh, Attic Theatre (2d ed.), p. 73 ff.; cp. Gulick, p. 62. —

ogðoîkonta mnás: this was for a period of three years

(§ 29) = 26½ minae a year. The defendant in XXI reckons his expenditure for seven years as trierarch at 6 t. = 360 minae, an average of 51½ minae a year, about twice the sum given in our passage. We may reasonably assume that our speaker was svntroîparaqos, bearing only half of the expense. For the similar case of Diogiton, with an expenditure of 24 minae, see 32. 26, and note on 32. 24.

43. eîșenîvektaî: in § 29 the occasions are spoken of as éîșoforâs pollas. For the éîșoforâ see on 12. 20. —

— πεντεκαίδεκα τάλαντα: of the 15 t. expended in the five or six years in question, the speaker has reckoned 5 t. for house and land, and 10 t. for the various public services; of this sum 2½ t. was for ordinary liturgies of a rich citizen (service as choragus and trierarch) and for direct war taxes—an average of a little less than half a talent a year. A still more important source of information as to the public services of rich Athenian citizens is the account which Lysias gives in XXI (§§ 1–5) of the public expenditures of his client for the first seven years after he attained his majority; the items are as follows:—

1st year.
Choragus (tragic chorus) 3000 dr.
Choragus (men's chorus) 2000
2d year.
Choragus (Pyrrhic) . . 800
Choragus (men's chorus) 5000
3d year.
Choragus (cyclic chorus) 300
7th year.
Gymnasiarch . . . . 1200
Choragus (boys' chorus) 1500+
Trierarch, 7 years . 6 t.
War tax . . . . 3000
War tax . . . . 4000
Total . . . 9 t. 2800+ dr.

This gives an average contribution of about 1½ t. a year. But these years were the final years of the Peloponnesian War, when public burdens were extraordinarily heavy; the same man gives smaller sums for the time immediately following. Moreover, the speaker says that the law would have required of him less than one fourth this amount. Unfortunately we have neither in this case nor in that of Aristophanes any knowledge of the total property or income from which these contributions were made, so that we have no sufficient basis for comparison with modern times. We lack the same data in the case of the speaker's father, whose services of this kind amounted to 9 t. 2000 dr. in a period of fifty years (§ 59). We know that at his death the estate amounted to between four and five talents (see on § 9), but the son says that he left ἐκ πολλῶν δόλνα, so that we can form no safe estimate of the father's property or income during the years of his active life.

44. τρίτον μέρος: Conon's will showed 40 t. (§ 40); the speaker

For the same phrase cp. 16. 3.

46. αὐτίκα: for example; so in § 63. See L. & S. s.v. But Athenaeus (12. 537 c) cites a statement of Heraclides Ponticus that Ischomachus lost his property at the hands of a couple of parasites. It would appear, therefore, that the later life of Ischomachus did not justify Xenophon’s praise.—πλεῖν: for the form see on 32. 20.—ἐβδομή-

52. For the question of the genuineness and position of this paragraph, see Crit. Note.—'Alkibiádh: Alcibiades was banished in 415, and his property was confiscated. On his return to the city in 408 (see Chron. App.), the state gave him land to reimburse him for the confiscated property (Isoc.
Upon the reversal of sentiment toward him after the disaster at Notium, he withdrew to his possessions on the Thracian Chersonese, where he remained till after Aegospotami. He then took refuge from the Spartan power with the satrap Pharnabazus. The Thirty passed a decree of exile against him and seized his land in Attica. At the same time the Persians were persuaded, perhaps in part by the Thirty, to put him to death. His son returned from exile after the deposition of the Thirty, and attempted to recover the land that they had seized; in this he was unsuccessful (Isoc. 16. 46). The claim to this land, together with the possessions in the Chersonese, probably made up the inheritance referred to in the text. — τέπταρα ἡ πέντε: in the summer of 411 the men of the fleet at Samos, refusing to serve the Four Hundred, elected Alcibiades general; he was in power from that time until after the battle of Notium (407). — διδόναι: on these contributions to commanders of fleets, see Introd. p. 163 f. — τίνες: position, see on ἡμῖν 12. 33. — παῖσιν: Alcibiades left two legitimate children, a son and a daughter. — τῶν ἐπιτροπευσάντων: τοῦ δὲ Ἀλκιβιάδου Περικλῆς καὶ Ἀρίφρων οἱ Ἐσθήπτου, προσήκοντες (relatives) κατὰ γένος, ἐπετρόπευν (Plut. Alcibiades, I).

48. Καλλίας ὁ Ἰππονίκου: the foundation of the fortune of this famous family is said to have been laid by a Hipponicus, a friend of Solon, who, learning from Solon of his plan to relieve debtors without disturbing land titles, hastily borrowed large sums of money and invested in land (Plutarch, Solon, XV). His nephew, Callias the first, was famous for his wealth, his hatred of the Pisistratidae, and his lavish expenditures (Herod. 6. 121). Callias's son, Hipponicus the second, is said to have added to his inherited wealth the treasure of a Persian general, which had been left in his hands by an Eretrian (Athen. XII. 537). His son, Callias the second, the πάππος of our passage, was reputed to be the richest Athenian of his time. Hipponicus the third inherited this wealth. He had 600 slaves let out in the mines; he gave his daughter, on her marriage to Alcibiades, the unheard-of dowry of ten talents. His son, the Callias of our text, finally dissipated the family wealth. He affected the new learning, and we have in Plato’s Protagoras (VI ff.) a humorous description of his house, infested by foreign sophists. His lavish expenditures upon flatterers and prostitutes still further wasted his property, and he died in actual want (Athen. l.c.). — τοίνυν: force as in § 47. — ἐτιμήσατο, τίμημα: the technical terms for valuation in connection with assessment of taxes. But here they are used of the real value of the property, not of the ‘assessed valuation.’ (In determining the tax—at least after 378—a certain fraction of the real valuation was taken as the ‘assessed valuation,’ and the tax levied upon that.) — Κλεοφωντα: a typical demagogue, the leader of the extreme democrats in the last years of the Peloponnesian War. His chief services were in the department of finance, where he was successful under the greatest difficulties. He was violently and persistently opposed to any compromise with Sparta, and stood so in the way of the final surrender that, during the peace negotiations, his political opponents compassed his death upon a doubtful charge of desertion of post. — προσήκοντες, κηδεσταί: relatives by birth, connections by marriage.
49. τῶν ἄρχαιοπλοῦτων: for the case see on οὐσίας § 45. — ἐκ τῆς ἄρχης: as in the case on trial, which turns upon the question whether Nicophemus and Aristophanes had grown rich through their naval service.

50. γάρ: explicative γάρ, see on 19. 12. Here the γάρ clause gives an instance illustrating a general statement = Eng. for instance. — Διότμος: in the last campaign of the Corinthian War (388/7) Diotimus and Iphicrates commanded an Athenian fleet on the Hellespont until forced back by the Spartan Antalcidas (Xen. Hell. 5. 1. 25 ff.). One duty of the fleet was to convoy grain ships coming from the Euxine. For this service the merchants paid a price to the treasury of the fleet, and in addition they were likely to make personal payments to the commanders, in order to secure prompt and efficient service. Such gratuities opened the way to serious abuse. — ταύτα: connect with ἐξήλεγξε. — ἀπογράφοντος: Diotimus made haste to “hand in his accounts” to the board of auditors, not waiting for their examination in regular course. — διεβάλλετο: = Eng. pluperfect. Whether a Greek subordinate impf. represents an act in progress at the time of the leading verb or before it, is determined by the context only. Cp. on 12. 56.

AGAINST THE GRAIN DEALERS

INTRODUCTION

This speech was written for a senator who was leading the prosecution of certain retail grain dealers, on the charge that, by buying up a larger stock of grain than the law permitted, they had injured the importers, and raised the price of grain to the consumers. It was probably delivered early in 386.¹

The successful expedition of Thrasybulus in 389/8 had brought the Hellespont under Athenian control, and thus secured the safety of the grain trade, which had been harassed by hostile fleets. But his death and the transfer of the command into less competent hands made the control of the Hellespont insecure again. At the same time the Spartans, having dislodged the Athenians from Aegina, were able constantly to endanger the grain ships at the home end of the route. The result was a period of unusual disturbance in the grain trade in the winter of 388/7.

The retail dealers (συνοπωλείοι) were bidding one against another for the limited stock of grain in the hands of the importers, thus raising the price of bread.

One of the Commissioners of Grain now advised the retailers to form a combination to keep down the wholesale price. The importers had to sell; they were forbidden by law to store up more than one third of any cargo; two thirds had to be thrown upon the market immediately. If, then, a sufficient combination could be made among the retail dealers, they could hold the price down effectively.

In accordance with this advice a ring was formed, but instead of passing the grain on to the consumers at a fair profit, the retailers used the low price to increase the stock of grain in their own storerooms, and put the retail price up according to the war rumors of the hour. The same practice was repeated in the following winter (§ 9).

When the facts of this combination became known, information (εἰσαγγελία) was lodged before the Prytanes, the business committee of the Senate, probably by some of the importers. The retail dealers had violated no law either in combining on the buying price, or (probably) in exacting an exorbitant profit on retail sales, but there was a law which forbade any retailer to buy more than fifty baskets at any one time; in their greed they had ignored this law, and through this it was possible to attack them.

When the Prytanes brought the complaint before the Senate, the senators were so aroused that some were ready to order the constables to arrest and execute the accused forthwith. But one of the senators, protesting against condemnation without trial, persuaded them to follow the legal procedure (§ 2). This would be for the Senate to give the accused a hearing, and if the charges were sustained, to pass the case on to a law court.

The opinion of this senator prevailed, and at a subsequent

1 See the quotation from Aristotle, below.

2 See on § 8. The purpose of the law restricting the retailers to fifty baskets must have been to prevent their raising the retail price by cornering the market. But if the law fixed the retail price at a definite advance on the wholesale price, no accumulation of grain by the retailers could have raised it.

4 The Senate had final jurisdiction only in case of penalties not greater than a fine of 500 dr. ([Demos.] 47. 43); in all other judicial cases their findings had to be passed on to a law court for final action. Arist. Resp. Ath. 45. 1.
session of the Senate the dealers were examined. The senator by whose influence the orderly procedure had been adopted was the only one of the senators who at this session pressed the case against them (§ 3). The Senate found the charges sustained, and sent the case to a court under the presidency of the Thesmothetae.

The senator who had become so prominent in the prosecution felt obliged to carry the case through—or otherwise he would have been believed to have been bought off by the "ring." He accordingly employed Lysias to prepare a speech for him to deliver in court.

A study of this case involves a knowledge of the Athenian laws relating to commerce.

The small area of the Attic territory in proportion to population, and the poor adaptedness of the soil to grain production as compared with that of olives and figs, left the people largely dependent upon foreign sources for their grain. More than half of the supply came from foreign ports; the greater part from the Hellespont and the Euxine.

The development and protection of this trade and the control of the retail market were objects of especial care. In all the

1 The threatening of suits against rich men had become so common on the part of professional blackmailers that reputable men were loath to have anything to do with a case like this (cp. § 1).

2 For the course in such cases, see Arist. Resp. Ath. Ic.

3 We have an inscription from Eleusis (CIA. II. 834 b) which gives the amount of barley and wheat received as the Eleusinian tax from Attica and the cleruchies, Salamis, Scyros, Lemnos, and Imbros, for the year 329/8 B.C. We know that this tax was one-sixth of one per cent on the whole production of barley, and one-twelfth of one per cent on the wheat (CIA. I. 27 b). From this it has been computed that the soil of Attica and the cleruchies gave the people of Attica for their own consumption in the following year about 600,000 med. of grain. A statement of Demosthenes (20. 31 f.) in 355 B.C. implies that the imports of grain at that time amounted to about 800,000 med. a year. While these data as to home and foreign grain are twenty-seven years apart, they may be taken as giving an approximate ratio for the two sources of supply. (See Meyer, Forschungen zur alten Geschichte, II. 190 ff.) wars the control of the critical posts on the grain route was a constant aim; colonies were sent out to points were they could both protect the route and become producers; in time of war grain fleets were convoyed by triremes (cp. 19. 50). All export of grain from Attica was prohibited, and no citizen or metic was allowed to carry grain from any source to any place save Attica, or to lend money on grain cargoes destined to other ports.

The importation was in the hands of wholesale dealers (ἐμποροι) at the Piraeus. Their business, with that of the wholesale market in general, was under the control of a board of ten Superintendents of the Market (Ἐμπορίων ἐπιμεληταί).

These officers kept records of all grain imported, and enforced the law that of every cargo of grain two thirds must be taken from the Piraeus up to the city.

The greater part of the grain thus passed at once into the hands of the retailers, but to prevent its accumulation in their storerooms and their consequent control of prices, it was provided by law, under penalty of death, that no retailer should buy more than fifty baskets at a time (§§ 5, 6).

Ath. 51. 4, ἐμπορίου δ’ ἐπιμελητᾶς δέκα. κληροῦσιν· τούτοις δὲ προστέτακται τῶν τ’ ἐμπορίων ἐπιμελείσθαι, καὶ τοῦ σίτου τοῦ καταπλέωντος εἰς τὸ σιτικὸν ἐμπόριον τὰ δύο μέρη τοὺς ἐμπόρους ἀναγκάζειν εἰς τὸ ἀσταν κομίζειν. This must mean that the importers at the Piraeus were obliged to sell immediately two thirds of every cargo to the retailers of the city proper (cp. Wilamowitz, Aristoteles u. Athen, I. 220 n. 68. Busolt, Gr. Aller. p. 245). In this way the importers were allowed to hold enough in their warehouses to provide for emergencies, but prevented from holding back a stock sufficient to corner the market. The reading εἰς τὸ Ἄττικὸν ἐμπόριον in Harpocratian s.vv. ἐπιμελητῆς ἐμπορίου (now corrected by the text of Arist.) led Boeckh to interpret this as meaning that of every cargo of grain brought by foreign merchants to the Piraeus only one third could be shipped on to other ports, a mistake which had become current in our handbooks before the discovery of Aristotle’s treatise.
The whole retail grain trade was supervised by a board of Grain Commissioners; of their appointment and duties we learn as follows from Aristotle (Resp. Ath. 51. 3):

"There were formerly ten σιτοφίλακες, appointed by lot, five for the Piraeus, and five for the city, but now there are twenty for the city, and fifteen for the Piraeus. They see, first, that the unground grain in the market is offered at a reasonable price (όνιος ἐστάτι δικαιῶς); secondly, that the millers sell the barley meal at a price proportionate to that of barley, and that the bakers sell their loaves at a price proportionate to that of wheat, and of such weight as the commissioners may prescribe (for the law requires them to fix the weight)."

Thus the government followed the grain at every step from its reception in the Piraeus to the home of the consumer.

In special emergencies the people were not content with merely restrictive measures, but they elected a board of σιτώναι to buy grain and sell it to the people at a reasonable price. At the first meeting of the Ecclesia in every prytany a part of the routine business was the consideration of the grain supply.

OUTLINE

I. Προοίμιον, Exordium, §§ 1–4.
Apology for appearing in the case, presented through brief narrative (Διήγησισ) of the circumstances which connect the speaker with it.

II. Πρόθεσις, Propositio, §§ 5–7.
The general line of argument is indicated by the use of Ἐρωτησ (cp. 12. 24–25).

1 For the question whether the ratio of the retail to the wholesale price was fixed by law, see on § 8.
2 Boeckh, Staatsaufstellung I. III; Dem. 18. 248; CIA. II. Nos. 335; 353.
3 Arist. Resp. Ath. 43. 4.
III. Πίστευσ, Argumentatio, §§ 8–21.

A. Answer to the claim that the defendants acted under direction of the Grain Commissioners, §§ 8–10.
   1. The advice was by only one commissioner, and that only to stop their competition, not to corner the supply, §§ 8–9.
   2. The advice was by a commissioner of last year; the prosecution is against acts of this year, § 9.
   3. Should we grant that they acted under advice of the commissioners, our only conclusion must be that the commissioners ought to share their punishment, § 10.

B. Answer to the claim that the defendants acted for the purpose of keeping prices down, §§ 11–16.
   1. This claim is inconsistent with the sudden and high rise of prices on the stock in their hands, §§ 11–12.
   2. This claim is inconsistent with their manifest indifference to the good of the people when called upon to meet their share of the public burdens, § 13.
   3. This claim is inconsistent with their notorious attempts to spread rumors of coming disaster, and their profits in your reverses, §§ 14–16.

C. An acquittal would be an affront to the importers, § 17.

D. Their acknowledgment of their violation of the law makes acquittal impossible, §§ 17–18.

E. The example of conviction is needed to keep this class of men in order in the future, §§ 19–20.

F. Refuse to pity them, but have sympathy rather with the citizens whom they have starved and the importers whom they have cheated, § 21.

IV. Ἐπιλόγος, Peroratio, § 22.

Their guilt is notorious. Justice and cheaper food are the issues of your verdict.
The acknowledgment of the defendants that they had broken the letter of the law left for the prosecution only the task of breaking down the moral effect of their plea that they acted under direction of the Commissioners. For this Lysias could count upon the common belief among the jury that the retailers were extortioners, and the popular indignation against anything that tended to raise the cost of food. He skilfully throws upon this group of defendants the odium that belongs to their class.

The issue was so simple, the case so prejudiced in favor of the prosecution by the preliminary action of the Senate, and the odium of the act so certain, that Lysias was content to present every fact of the prosecution with the utmost simplicity and brevity.

The personality of the speaker does not appear, but the arguments are unanswerable, and the appeal to prejudice is shrewdly planned.

The language is as simple as the thought. The speaker wishes to avoid every appearance of the professional prosecutor (§ 1); hence the language is free from all rhetorical artifice. The final words reflect the spirit of the speech and the practical character of the man.
ΚΑΤΑ ΤΩΝ ΣΙΤΟΠΩΛΩΝ

1. Πολλοί μοι προσεληνύθασιν, ὁ ἄνδρες δικασταὶ, θαυμάζοντες ὅτι ἐγὼ τῶν σιτοπωλῶν ἐν τῇ βουλῇ κατηγόρον, καὶ λέγοντες ὅτι ὡμέις, εἰ ὅσ μάλιστα αὐτῶν ἀδίκειν ἦγεῖσθε, οὐδὲν ἦττον καὶ τοὺς περὶ τούτων ποιομένους τοὺς λόγους συκοφαντεῖν νομίζετε. οἶθεν σὸν ἴναγκασμαί κατηγορεῖν αὐτῶν, περὶ τούτων πρῶτον εἰπεῖν βούλομαι.

2. Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οἱ προετάνεις ἀπέδοσαν εἰς τὴν βουλὴν περὶ αὐτῶν, οὕτως ὥργίσθησαν αὐτοῖς, ὡστε ἐλεγόν

1. ἐν τῇ βουλῇ: see Introd. p. 214. — καὶ (before τοὺς): also. The common idea of guilt in ἀδίκειν and συκοφαντεῖν leads to the use of καὶ. "However guilty you believe the dealers to be, you none the less think that those also who prosecute them are guilty—of sycophancy." — ποιομένους τοὺς λόγους: cp. on 12. 2. — συκοφαντεῖν: an indication of the extent to which blackmail had gone in the hands of the petty lawyers and politicians. — οἶθεν: the antecedent is τούτων.

2. οἱ προετάνεις: as the executive committee of the Senate, the Prytanes received the complaint and laid it before the Senate. Who the complainants were does not appear. It is likely that they were importers, for their interests are urged in § 17. After the charge was once taken over by the Senate and the case sent on to court, these complainants had no further official connection with it. — ἀπέδοσαν: the technical term for reference of business to the body to which it belongs (cp. the use of the same word for payment of a debt), L. & S. s.v. Note that metics are assumed here to have the same right to trial as citizens.— τοῖς ἐνδέκα: the board of ten Constables and their clerk, who had charge of prisons, executions, and the more important arrests. Introd. p. 161 n. 1.— ἡμῶν: the Senate.— ἀκρίτους ἀπολωλέναι: the thought of the proposal to put them to death without a trial is so prominently in mind that ἀκρίτους is used even in the second half of the alternative, where it strictly has no place: the innocent ought not to be put to death at all — tried or untried.

3. ἐπεχείρουν: i.e. after the session of the Senate. — ἐποιούμην: i.e. at the recent session. Tense, see on ἐποιοῦν 12. 25, and on 12. 56 and 19. 50.— ἡ κρίσις: at the second session of the Senate, when they decided whether to try the case themselves or refer it to a jury.— ἔργῳ ἀπελογησάμην: I answered the charge by my action.— ἔλεγον,

4. ἡρξάμην: i.e. at the second session, ἡ κρίσις § 3.— μὲν οὖν: force, see on 12. 3 C.— τὰς αἰτίας: the charges described in § 3 (διαβάλλεις ... λέγοντες κτλ.).— πρὶν: the governing clause is positive in form only, it has therefore the effect of a negative, HA. 924 A; G. 1470 (last sentence); B. 627; Gl. 644 d; GMT. 647.

In this case the buyers did combine to hold the price down, but the charge is that the individual retailer bought more than the law allowed.— φορμῶν: the word means a basket; but as to how much the standard grain basket held we have no knowledge whatever.— ἀρχόντων: the σιτο- φύλακες. For the attempt of the accused to defend himself by his answer, while admitting an apparent violation of the law, cp. 12. 25 ὦ τῷ τῶν ἀρχόντων προσ- ταχθέντα δεδώς ἐποίησον.
6 Ἐὰν μὲν τοίνυν ἀποδείξῃ, δὲ ἄνδρες δικασταί, ὡς ἐστὶ νόμος ὅς κελεύει τοὺς συτοπώλας συνωνείσθαι τὸν σίτου, ἐὰν οἱ ἁρχοντες κελεύσωσι, ἀποψηφίσασθε. εἰ δὲ μὴ, δικαίων ὑμᾶς καταψηφίσασθαι. ἤμεις γὰρ ἕμων παρεσχόμεθα τὸν νόμον, δὲ ἀπαγορεύει μηδένα τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει πλεῖω σίτου πεντήκοντα φορμῶν συνωνείσθαι.
7 Χρήν μὲν τοίνυν, δὲ ἄνδρες δικασταί, ἰκανὴν εἶναι ταύτην τὴν κατηγορίαν, ἐπειδὴ οὗτος μὲν ὁμολογεῖ συμπρίασθαι, δὲ δὲ νόμος ἀπαγορεύων φαίνεται, ἤμεις δὲ κατὰ τοὺς νόμους ὄμωμοκατε ψηφιεῖσθαι. ὅμως δ᾽ ίνα πεισθῆτε ὅτι καὶ κατὰ τῶν ἁρχόντων ψεύδονται, ἀνάγκη διὰ μακροτέρων εἰσεῖν περὶ αὐτῶν. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ οὗτοι τὴν αἰτίαν εἰς ἐκείνους ἀνέφερον, παρακαλέσαντες τοὺς ἁρχοντας ἡρωτῶμεν. καὶ οἱ μὲν τέταρτας οὔδεν ἔφασαν εἰδέναι τοῦ πράγματος, Ἀνυτός δὲ ἔλεγεν ὡς τοῦ προτέρου χειμῶνος, ἐπειδὴ τίμιος ἦν ὁ οὗτος, τοῦτων ὑπερβαλλόντων ἀλλήλους καὶ πρὸς σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ὁκτὼ 32. 21. — Ἀνυτός: it is uncertain whether this was the Anytus who shared in the prosecution of Socrates. That Anytus, a rich tanner, was a leading democrat, associated with Thrasylus in the Return. Cp. Isoc. 18. 23 Θρασύβουλος καὶ Ἀνυτός μέγιστον μὲν δυνάμενοι τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει (c. 399 B.C.). This activity in protecting the poor man's food supply would be quite in keeping with his democratic rôle. — πρὸς σφᾶς αὐτοὺς: the reflexive for the reciprocal pronoun (HA.
686 b; G. 996; B. 471 n. 2), a use common in Attic prose; in Lysias confined to this passage and 14. 42. For πρόσ see on 32. 19, Crit. Note.

— μαχομένων: on the metaphorical language, see Introd. p. 25 n. 5. — παύσασθαι φιλομοιοῦσιν: cp. on παύσασθαι λέγωντι 12. 1. — ἀξιώτατον: L. & S., ἄξιος I. 3 b; cp. a. — δεῖν γὰρ κτλ.: for they had to sell at an advance of not more than an obol (on the medimnus). This gives the reason for Anytus’s belief that by the plan proposed the people would get cheap grain: the retailers are to combine to keep down the wholesale price, and then they in turn ‘must’ sell at an advance of not more than an obol. But why ‘must’ they? Two interpretations are possible:

(1) It may be that there was a law forbidding retailers of grain to sell for more than an obol per medimnus above the wholesale price (i.e. the wholesale price at the time of the sale). Such a law would neither be difficult of execution nor inconsistent with the conduct reviewed in this speech. The wholesale price day by day was matter of common knowledge, and the sales of retailers could easily be followed, for it was in the interest of the purchasers to report any over-charge. A case like that mentioned in § 12 is not inconsistent with this, for a rise of a drachma in the wholesale price would carry with it the same rise in the retail price. But we should suppose, if there had been such a law, that the violation of it would have been one of the facts brought out in the cross-questioning of § 5; there the case seems to rest on the violation of the law restricting quantity. The statement of Aristotle is not definite: οὗτοι (sc. οἱ σιτο— φύλακες) δ' ἐπιμελοῦνται, πρῶτον μὲν ὡς ὅ ἐν ἀγορᾷ σῖτος ἀργὸς ὁμοιὸς ἔσται δικαῖος Resp. Ath. 51. 3. See also p. 214 n. 2. (2) The restriction of an obol’s advance may have been laid by Anytus himself. He may have said to the retailers (though he now denies it) that he would overlook their violation of the law as to quantity on condition that they confine themselves to a profit of an obol per medimnus, so that the outcome should be cheaper grain.

FOR THE CRIPPLE

INTRODUCTION

Lysias wrote this speech in support of the plea of a crippled artisan for the retention of his name on the list of disabled paupers who received a dole of an obol a day from the public treasury.

In earlier times poor-relief by the state had been confined to the families that had become dependent through war. But during the terrible hardships of the last years of the Peloponnesian War it became necessary to support large numbers of citizens, whose means of livelihood had been cut off by the war, and who, with their families, were shut up in the city. An allowance of two obols a day from the treasury was all that saved many people from starvation during the last third of the war.

We infer from our speech, supplemented by the later testimony of Aristotle, that with the return of peace the state still gave poor-relief to the disabled (§ 4), without restricting it to veterans or the families of men who had fallen in war, but at the rate of only one obol a day (§§ 13, 26).

1 A system of military pensions for men who had been disabled, and for the sons and dependent parents of men who had died, goes back to the time of Solon and Pisistratus: the soldiers' pension under Pisistratus, after the example of Solon in the case of a single disabled veteran (Heraclides, cited by Plutarch, Solon, 31); support and education of sons, introduced by Solon (Diogenes Laert. 1. 55). The pension of dependent parents (Plato, Menex. 248 E) presumably goes back to the same time.

2 Arist. Resp. Ath. 28. 3; Wilamowitz, Aristoteles u. Athen, II, 212 ff.

3 If the relief at issue in our speech had been granted on the ground of military service, that point would be brought out in the plea.
XXIV. FOR THE CRIPPLE

So many families had lost everything in the war and the subsequent exile under the Thirty that such general relief must have been necessary; and we may well believe that the impoverished condition of the treasury made it necessary to cut the sum down to one obol.

The Senate now had control of the distribution, passing annually upon the list of beneficiaries (§ 26). The year's allowance seems to have been given in ten payments.

Subsequently the relief was raised to two obols. For the time of Aristotle we have the following specific statement: "The Senate examines the disabled (τοὺς ἀδύνατους) also. For there is a law which requires that those whose property is of less value than three minae, and who are so disabled in body as not to be able to do any work, be examined by the Senate and granted support at public cost to the amount of two obols daily to each. They have a paymaster, appointed by lot." (Resp. Ath. 49. 4.)

The case with which our speech is concerned arose at the time of the annual scrutiny of the list. Remonstrance was formally made against the continuance (§§ 7, 26) of the name of a certain elderly cripple (§ 7), who had a shop near the Agora (§ 20).

1 There is nothing in the words τὸ παρὰ τῆς πόλεως ἀργύριον (§ 4) to warrant the conclusion that the original grant to each individual was made by the Ecclesia. In § 22 the reference is to the act of the Ecclesia in establishing the system, not in making the individual award.

2 Aeschin. I. 104 τὸν τῆς πρωτανείας μισθόν.

3 Harpocratin, s.v. ἀδύνατοι, cites a statement of Philochorus that the payment was 9 dr. per month. Reckoning the "month" as a prytany, we have 1 ½ obols daily. The sum would naturally vary with changes in cost of living and with the financial ability of the state. A statement in the scholium on Aeschin. I. 103, that the sum was three obols, is probably due to a confusion of the relief payment with the daily pay of the juror.

It is to be remembered that the jury pay, available to all who cared to sit in court (see App. § 6), and the pay for sitting in the Ecclesia offered no small relief to the poor citizens. There were, moreover, Benevolent Orders, the members of which received help in emergencies from the funds of the fraternity (Boeckh, Staatsaufhabaltung, I. 312). For the aid often given by wealthy citizens, see on 19. 59.
INTRODUCTION

The Senate, having heard the remonstrance, appointed a hearing, at which the cripple would have opportunity to defend his claim. Thus far the facts are clear from references in our speech; but beyond this we can only conjecture the course of events.

From the tone of the speech we may assume that the remonstrant is a man of character and property, quite in earnest in his efforts for reform, and quite out of touch with the average, easy-going senator whom the lot has sent up to represent the people. The old cripple is all that is charged—a lusty rascal, a "character" about the Agora, and the delight of the young men of the sporting set, who make his shop their resort.

When the news comes to the shop that the "reformer" is after the old man, the young fellows—half in sport and half in earnest—crowd around him protesting that he is being abused, and assuring him that he shall have the best legal talent in the city for his defense.

Lysias is called in and enters heartily into the fun. At the time of the scrutiny of the list the remonstrant publicly stated the grounds of his objection, so that the defense is able to anticipate the line of attack. And now a speech is to be fitted to this defendant; it must be full of his homely wit and sarcasm, and full of coarse abuse of the "reformer." And, as a piece of literary fun, an air of learning and a flavor of rhetoric must pervade the whole speech, and make it a parody on the oratory of the day.

And so the speech was written, and the old rascal committed it to memory, and spoke it off before the Senate with due solemnity,—with what result we do not know, but it would be a most un-Athenian Senate which would fail to cap the hour's fun with a jolly vote of confidence in the pauper, and a defeat for the aristocratic enemy of the poor.

Some critics have held that this speech is only a bit of literary sport, and for an imaginary case.¹ Such rhetorical exercises were common enough among the writers of the time. The reason for so regarding the speech for the cripple is the feeling that the subject-matter is too unimportant, and the tone of the speech too comic, to have received the attention of the Senate. But the obol-case, small as it was, did rest with the Senate (Aristotle, l.c.), and the comic tone may well have been the only tone that would fit the man.

The ascription of the speech to Lysias seems to have been questioned in antiquity,² and has recently been vigorously attacked by Bruns.³ The first objection raised by Bruns is that the tone and extent of the attack on the complainant are at variance with Lysias's uniform calmness and restraint in attack; Lysias's defendants confine their attacks on the prosecutors to their acts in the case itself, and are far from giving a general characterization of the men; the extent of the attack is always well proportioned to the gravity of the case. But in our speech we have a bitter and scornful attack on the whole character of the opponent, and it is as vehement as though the issue were some great thing—not an obol a day. Bruns sees a second violation of the Lysian manner in the failure of the defendant to press the real points at issue—his physical disability and his poverty—and the comical pose in which he is made to give, instead of argument, a picture of himself. Bruns's arguments serve to emphasize more sharply than had been done before the peculiarities of the speech, and they are conclusive against any view of it as a sober defense; but they do not meet the theory that the speech is a humorous parody, written for the actual use of a notoriously odd character, for whom there was really no plea except his own comical personality. The definiteness of this personality, as it stands out in the speech, must always be the strongest argument for ascribing the work to the master of ἠθοποιία.

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

In all criticism both of the matter and form of this speech we must bear in mind the large element of parody. Some of the arguments are purposely irrelevant, some of the expressions are purposely rhetorical.

I. Προοίμιον, Exordium, §§ 1–3.

The opening words of the speech for Mantitheus (XVI) show how neatly the old cripple is here imitating a stock form of introduction for a speech in δοκιμασία. This is, indeed, his δοκιμασία, for the office of—state pauper. The absurd humor of the rest of the proem puts the hearers into the right mood for appreciating the burlesque defense that is to follow.

The proem was the part of the speech on which the Gorgian school lavished their most artificial tricks of poetic word and form. It is a neat turn that Lysias gives in letting the illiterate old cripple close his proem with a couple of periods in the full Gorgian style:

καὶ γὰρ οἶμαι δεῖν, ὡ βουλή, tὰ τὸν σώματος ἄνσω τὸν ἡγέτην τὰς τής ψυχῆς ἐπιτηδεύμασιν 1 ἱάσθαι 2 καλῶς.

εἰ γὰρ ἔξ ἵσου τῇ συμφορᾷ καὶ τὴν διάνοιαν ἐξω καὶ τὸν ἄλλον βίον διάζω, τὶ τοῦτον διοίσω;

περὶ μὲν τούτων τοσατά μοι εἰρήσθω. 3

II. Πρόθεσις, Propositio, §§ 4–5.

The outline of the complaint is probably an absurd travesty on it. We may suppose that the complainant had called attention

1 On the παρογμασία see App. § 58. 5.
2 On the metaphor see Introd. p. 25, n. 5.
3 On the ὁμοιότέλευτον see App. § 57. 4.
to the horseback riding, something that only the richer citizens could afford, as indicating that the cripple had rich friends who could and would support him; the cripple pretends that the argument was that he was physically sound enough to jump onto a horse and ride it!

The complainant had doubtless charged against the character of the cripple that his shop was a gaming place for young spend-thrifts; the cripple represents the complaint as being that the income from his trade is so great that he is able to hold his own among men whose expenditures are most lavish.

III. Διήγησις, Narratio, § 6.
The simple description of his sad plight has its touch of fun in the implication that the old pauper still hopes for children and a slave (οὐπω εἰςίν, οὐπω δύναμαι κτήσασθαι).

IV. Παρέκβασις, Egressio, §§ 7–9.
The Narratio is used 1 as basis for an immediate appeal, instead of being followed directly by the arguments. Here, again, the style becomes rhetorical, in the conspicuous use of pairs of coordinate cola (see App. § 57. 3):

\text{µὴ τοίνυν, ἔπειδὴ γε ἢστιν, ὃ βουλῇ, θῶσαι μὲ δίκαιως, ἀπολέγητε ἀδίκως.}
\text{μὴ δὲ νεωτέρῳ καὶ μᾶλλον ἐρωμένῳ ὄντι ἔδοτε πρεσβύτερον καὶ ἀσθενέστερον γιγνόμενον ἀφέλησθε. § 7.}

V. Πίστεις, Argumentatio, §§ 10–20.
In the argument we have a combination of parody on stock arguments, and witty, shrewd turns of defense and attack. There is no sound proof of either poverty or incapacity to earn support — probably because there could be none. Lysias gives a shining example of his ability to meet the common definition of the rhetorician’s task, τὸν ἔττω λόγον κρείστω ποιεῖν.

1 So in 12. 20–23; see p. 50.
XXIV. FOR THE CRIPPLE

The argument from “probability” had been especially developed by Gorgias. It is with a fine sense of humor that Lysias makes the old man pass in §§ 16–18, where this comes forward, from the simple style of speech to the epideictic form, the utterance of wise observations on human nature, expressed in stilted, antithetic periods. Every sentence of §§ 16–18 falls into this formal, rhetorical mold; e.g.:

οὐ γὰρ τοὺς πενιμένους
καὶ λίπαν ἀπόρως διακεκέμένους

ὑβρίζειν εἰκός

ἀλλὰ τοὺς πολλοὶ πλέω τῶν ἀναγκαῖων κεκτημένους.¹

οἴδε τοὺς ἀδυνάτους τοὺς σώματι ὄντας ἀλλὰ τοὺς μᾶλλον πιστειόντας ταῖς αὐτῶν ῥώμαις;

οἴδε τοὺς ἠδή προβεβηκότας τῇ ἀληκτίᾳ

ἀλλὰ τοὺς ἔτι νέους καὶ νέας ταῖς διανοοῖς χρωμένους.

VI. 'Επίδογος, Peroratio, §§ 21–27.

The parody on the common pleas of the day is carried out in the absurd appeal based on the past life of the speaker: he has been no sycophant; he, the cripple, has not been violent; he, the pauper, refrained from sharing in the government of the aristocratic Thirty!

The closing words thrust again at the would-be reformer.

The antithesis is emphasized by using μὲν in both cola of the first member. In the second member νῦν δὲ is the real correlative of τότε μὲν (φαινοίμην), but is re-enforced by the second τότε, which gives a more perfect verbal balance than a repetition of νῦν would have given. Note that the first τότε is to be taken strictly with λαμβάνων only, for φανοῦμην refers to that hypothetical future time when the Senate may have refused him his obol. On the tense of λαμβάνων see on ἀνωμένον 12. 32.

9. ἄν: cp. § 2 and see on 12. 1. — σαφέστατα μόνος: a combination of two ideas, σαφέστατα ἀνθρώπων and μόνος ἀνθρώπων. So Cicero, Proov. Consul. 12, unus omnium nequissimus. — κατασταθείς: cp. διδάσκαλος καταστάς 12. 78. Lysias uses the aor. pass. form only here and in 13. 35. It is very rare in other prose writers. — χορηγός: next to the trierarchy the most costly of the liturgies; see on 19. 43. — τραγῳδίς: L. & S. s.v. I. 2. Case, HA. 767; G. 1165; B. 378; Gl. 523. Cp. 21. 2 ἀνδράσι χορηγῶν ἐς Διώνυσα. — ἀντίδοσιν: if A. was appointed for a liturgy, but claimed that B., as being richer than himself, should have been called upon first, he might demand of B. that he assume the burden or else exchange property with him. If B. refused, the courts decided which must perform the liturgy. See Smith, Dict. Antiq. s.v. — χορηγήσαι: tense, cp. on ὄκησε 12. 4. — τοιούτου, πονηρότερον: 'that I am as badly off as I claim to be, and even worse.' πονηρότερον covers both his physical and financial wretchedness, both of which the complainant disputes.

10. On the following argument see Introd. p. 237. — τὴν 'τύχην δεῖσαι: τύχη is substituted here for τοὺς θεοὺς in the common formula for “fear of the gods and shame before men”; cp. 32. 13 εἰ μηδένα ἀνθρώπων ἰσχύνοι, τοὺς θεοὺς ἐχρήν σε . . . δεδεόναι. Here τίχυς is fitting as being that divine power which is particularly concerned in reversals of life, and may any day make a cripple and a beggar of the now prosperous complainant. The Greek conception of τίχυς, while sometimes not passing beyond mere “chance,” is usually that of an active power, and there is a strong tendency to personify it, making it coordinate with Providence, as Lysias distinctly does where he says (13. 63) ἦ δὲ τίχυς καὶ ὁ δαίμων περιεποίησε θυτὸν τούτον and Providence saved them. The cripple’s idea is expressed in Isocrates’s warning (1. 29) μηδεμί συμφορὰν ὀνειδίσῃς: καυχή γὰρ ἦ τίχυς καὶ τὸ μέλλον ἀδρατὸν revile no man for his misfortune, for fortune is common to all and the future unseen. — ἤστειν, φιλοσοφεῖν: on the συνονωμία see App. § 58. 2. — ὅν εἰς ἑγὼ: the emphasis upon the pronoun in this formula causes the frequent omission of the copula, even of the first and second persons, which in other connections is rarely omitted. — ταύτην: gender, see on 12. 37. — εἰς: see on εἰς σωτηρίων 12. 14. — τὸν ἀναγκαῖον: partitive, for the longer trips among those that I have to make; or perhaps = ἦ τὰς ἀναγκαίας ordinary trips, i.e. trips for the everyday necessities.

11. ὃ . . . τεκμήριοιν: cp. on 32. 24. — τὴν ὑβρίν: the insolence charged by the complainant. — ἀστράβης: a soft saddle with a back, for women and invalids. — ἂν:

σθαι τὸν ὄβολον ὡς ὑγιαίνοντος, τοῦτο δὲ ψηφίσασθαι πάντας ὡς ἀναπήρῳ; οὐ γὰρ δὴπον τὸν αὐτὸν ὑμεῖς μὲν ὡς δυνάμενον ἀφαιρήσεσθε τὸ διδόμενον, οἱ δὲ θεσμοθέται ὡς ἀδύνατον οὕτα κληροῦσθαι κωλύσουσιν.

Crit. Note. — εὖ ποιῶν: while grammatically εὖ ποιῶν is connected with the second clause only, its force extends over both. It is a stereotyped expression, fortunately, thank heaven. Its formal use went so far that Demosthenes could say (23. 143), τοῦτο . . . εὖ ποιῶν, οὐ συνέβη this, fortunately, did not happen. — ὁσπερ ἐπικλῆ·ρου: on the simile and the personification, see Introd. p. 25, N. 5. The point is that when by the absence of sons an estate fell to a daughter, the nearest male heir could demand the hand of the heiress in marriage, even to the extent of taking her from her husband, if she was already married. The provision was made in order to keep the property in the family (cp. on 32. 4). The cripple says that the complainant looks upon his misfortune as an heiress, and is trying to get possession of her inheritance of an obol a day. It is the best of the joke to represent the complainant as trying to get the cripple's obol for himself.

reproach was involved in frequenting such places is clear from the fact that Demosthenes thinks it a good point to make with a jury that the man whom he is attacking (25.52) does not frequent the shops: He shares no man's affection or companionship; ... nor does he resort to any of these barbers' shops or perfumers' shops in the city, nor any other shops—not one. But he is implacable, restless, unsocial, with no feeling of gratitude or friendship or anything else that a right-minded man feels. These ancient assemblies, like their modern counterparts, “saved the country,”—with words,—as Isocrates tells us (7.15): Which (the constitution) now become corrupted troubles us not, nor do we take thought how we may restore it; but we sit in the shops and find fault with the state of the country, and say that never in all the history of the democracy were we worse governed,—while in action, and in the principles that we cherish, we are better content with it than with the constitution that our fathers left us. — δὴ ἀν τύχῃ: sc. προσφοιτῶν; cp. 12. 18.—ἀγορᾶς: on life about the Agora, see Gulick, p. 40ff.—καταγνώσεται: with gen. and acc. DEFENSE AGAINST THE CHARGE OF HAVING SUPPORTED THE GOVERNMENT OF THE THIRTY

This speech was written for a citizen who had been one of the Three Thousand admitted by the Thirty to a nominal share in their government. The speaker has now, under the restored democracy, been chosen (by vote or lot) to some office.1

At the δοκιμασία 2 his eligibility is challenged on the ground that he was a supporter of the Thirty. The complainants have brought no charge of specific acts, basing their attack upon the principle that former members of the oligarchical party (οἱ ἐκ ἀστεως) cannot be trusted in office under the democracy. The defense must attack this principle, and it is this fact which raises the speech above the plane of personal questions, and makes it one of the most interesting documents in the history of the period immediately after the Return.

1 The title of the speech in the Mss. is Δήμου καταλύσεως ἀπολογία, but that is probably only an ancient editor's inference from the general character of the speech. It can hardly have been a defense against an indictment for treason, for the speaker nowhere expresses apprehension of any result save deprivation of some of the rights of a citizen (see §§ 3, 4, 23), and § 14 implies that he is pleading for an honor, not for safety (ὑπ᾿ ἴμων νυνὶ τιμᾶσθαι δίκαιός εἰμι).

2 All officials were required to submit to a formal scrutiny (δοκιμασία) before entering upon office. Except in the case of Archons and Senators this was conducted by a law court. Senators were examined by the outgoing Senate; Archons appeared first before the Senate, then before a law court, See p. 133 f., and Gilbert, p. 218 ff.; Gardner and Jevons, p. 465.
The oath of amnesty provided for the exclusion from the city of certain specified leaders of the oligarchy; to all other citizens it guaranteed oblivion of the past (τῶν δὲ παρεληλυθότων μηδὲν πρὸς μεδένα μνησικακεῖν ἔχειν). Under any fair interpretation of this agreement the former supporters of the Thirty, even senators, office-holders, and soldiers under them, were perfectly eligible to office under the restored democracy. But to keep their pledges in the full spirit of them proved to be a severe test of the self-control of the party of the Return.

The wiser democratic leaders fully recognized the critical nature of the situation. An attempt by one of the returned exiles to violate the agreement and take vengeance on one of the city party was met by the summary seizure of the complainant and his execution by the Senate without trial. This made it clear that there was to be no policy of bloody reprisals; but the feeling of hostility remained.

Then, less than three years after the Return, came the attempt of the survivors of the Thirty, settled at Eleusis, to organize an attack by force. The prompt march of the citizen forces, together with their treacherous seizure of the oligarchical leaders, soon put down the movement. But now more than ever it seemed to the democratic masses intolerable that members of the city party should have equal privileges with themselves. Their spokesmen began to say that the aristocrats might consider the people generous indeed in allowing their former enemies to vote in the Ecclesia and to sit on juries; that to ask for more than this was an impertinence (Lys. 26. 2, 3).

 Those who had been conspicuous supporters of the Thirty, or personally connected with their crimes of bloodshed and robbery, naturally refrained from thrusting themselves into prominence; indeed, few of these had probably remained in the city. But the first test came when men whose support of the Thirty had been only passive, and against whose personal character no charge

2 Cp. XVI Introd. p. 133.
3 Arist. Resp. Ath. 40. 2,
could be raised, ventured to become candidates for office. Their δοκιμασία gave opportunity for attack by personal enemies, by political blackmailers, or by politicians who were posing as jealous guardians of the democracy.

This speech was written by Lysias for one of the first cases of this sort, — it may have been the very first. The issue was vital. If a man like the speaker, of proved ability and personal character, untainted by crime under all the opportunities offered during the rule of the Thirty, was now to be excluded from office, the reconciliation must soon break down.

The date of the speech cannot be earlier than 400 B.C., nor can it be much later.¹

¹ The new officials took their seats in midsummer; their δοκιμασία occurred shortly before. The siege of Eleusis is already past (§ 9); this fell in the archonship which closed July, 400 (ἐπὶ Ἐ[να]’ντον ἄρχοντος Arist. Resp. Ath. 40. 4). The speech cannot be placed much later than 400, for the speaker, with all his pleas based on his good conduct before and during the rule of the Thirty, says nothing of his conduct since the Return (October, 403), nor does he cite cases of other men of his party holding office. Moreover, his warnings show that there are fugitives of the oligarchical party who still hope for a reaction and a counter blow against the democracy, and who are not yet sure what will be the treatment of the former supporters of the Thirty (§ 23), while in § 27 he speaks of the democracy not as established, but as in process of being established (δημοκρατία γίγνεται). A longer time would seem to be implied in the charges against the sycophants (ταχέως μὲν ἐκ πενήτων πλοῦσιοι γεγένηται, πολλὰς δὲ ἄρχας ἄρχοντες οὐδεμιᾶς εὐθύνην διδάσκαν), were these not stock charges, hardly to be taken seriously.
In return for my positive services to the state I ask only what you give to the merely harmless citizen.

My accusers try to lay upon me the crimes of the Thirty because they can find nothing wrong in my own conduct.

II. Πρόθεσις, Propositio, § 7.
It is unreasonable to suppose that I am hostile to the democracy (the πρόθεσις is incomplete, stating only the first of the arguments that are to follow).

III. Πίστευς, Argumentatio, §§ 8–28. (The πίστευς form the λύσις of the charges.)
A. The proposed refusal of office would be unjust to me, for I was never disaffected toward the democracy, §§ 8–18.
B. The policy of refusal would be unwise for you, §§ 19–28.

IV. Παρέκβασις, Egressio, §§ 29–34.
The complainants are unworthy of your confidence.

V. Ἐπίλογος, Peroratio. (The peroration probably began with § 35; it is lost by the mutilation of the Ms.)

I. Προοίμιον, Exordium, §§ 1–6.
The opening words, like those of the defense of Mantitheus, give at once the impression of conscious innocence, but with this we have here a more indignant tone of protest against the action of the complainants, and an earnest tone of warning to the jury. From the first the tone is less that of one pleading for favor than of one who identifies his interest with theirs and earnestly counsels them.

The sentences are long and dignified. Only after the proem is well under way is there any touch of artificial rhetoric.

II. Πρόθεσις, Propositio, § 7.
A speech for the defense need not open with a statement of the case,—the speech of the prosecution has already given that,
ARGUMENT AND STYLE

— but the defendant will naturally give at the beginning some statement of his line of argument. Lysias chooses to state here only his first point. When, in § 19, he passes on to his second argument, he does it without any πρόθεσις.

A. §§ 8–18. The speaker cannot deny the fact that he remained in the city under the Thirty; he must therefore deny the significance of the fact. The argument is surprising; in the most blunt way he asserts that men follow self-interest in their attitude toward one form of government or another. He gives the jury to understand that he remained in the city under the Thirty because it was for his personal safety and for the safety of his property that he do so; but he claims that it would have been still more to his personal advantage that the Thirty had never been established, and shows that support of the restored democracy is altogether to his personal advantage. He frankly tells the jury to assume that he acts from an enlightened self-interest, and demonstrates that on that assumption he will be a reliable supporter of their government.

The cool frankness with which he waives aside all claim of sentimental patriotism, ascribes his services to the earlier democracy to the desire to stand well with the people (§§ 12–18), admits that he submitted to the oligarchy, and asks the jury to estimate his relations to the new government purely on the basis of his personal interests, must have been refreshing to a jury weary of hearing pious protestations of loyalty and sacrifice for the sacred democracy. If their first thought was that they were dealing with a shameless egoist, their later feeling must have been that this was an outspoken man, who dared express his opinions frankly; and then—who could deny the force of his arguments?

Not only is the argument as a whole novel and vigorous, but here and there Lysias gives a bright and unexpected turn to the subordinate parts. In the summary as to the speaker's conduct under the oligarchy he makes neat use of the dilemma: If the Thirty offered him the chance to share their power and he refused, that shows that he was no friend to them; if the Thirty did not offer it, that shows that they were no friends to him (§ 14). Again, in § 17 he makes the keen plea that a man who kept his hands clean in times when there was every encouragement to wrong-doing can be counted on to be a law-abiding citizen under the present settled government.

The dignified language of the proem is continued throughout this argument. The sentences are in rounded, periodic form, with much of antithesis, which reaches its height in § 18:

\[\text{ἡγούμαι δὲ, ὦ ἄνδρες δικασταί, οὐκ ἄν δικαίως ὑμᾶς μοσεῖν τοὺς ἐν τῇ ὀλιγαρχίᾳ μηδὲν πεπονθότας κακῶν ἔξομεν ὁργίζεσθαι τοῖς εἰς τὸ πλῆθος ἔξημαρτηκόσιν.}\]

\[οὐδὲ τοὺς μὴ φυγόντας ἐχθροὺς νομίζειν ἀλλὰ τοὺς ὑμᾶς ἐκβαλόντας,}\]

\[οὐδὲ τοὺς προθυμομένους τὰ ἔαντῶν σῶσαι ἀλλὰ τοὺς τὰ τῶν ἄλλων ἀφηρημένους,}\]

\[οὐδὲ οὐ τῆς σφετέρας αὐτῶν συντηρίας ἐνεκα ἐμείναν ἐν τῷ ἀστεί ἀλλ' οὕνας ἐτέρους ἀπολέσαι βουλόμενοι μετέσχον τῶν πραγμάτων.}\]

III. B. §§ 19–28. The speaker now assumes the part of political adviser. Entirely without passion, with the tone of one whose chief thought is for the good of the city, he analyzes the political situation, showing how essential it is that the restored democracy unite all citizens in its support, and how dangerous a course it would be to alienate from the new government the supporters of the oligarchy.

This is a strange tone for a defendant, that of political instruction and warning. But it was true to the situation. And such a plea was more effective as coming from a speaker who had no sentimental illusions as to either form of government, but who argued purely on grounds of ordinary prudence.

The language becomes still more elevated with the increasing dignity and earnestness of the thought, almost reaching the epideictic style.

IV. Παρέκβασις, Egressio, §§ 29–34.

A counter attack on the prosecution is a natural and a common part of a plea for the defense. It usually falls, as here, between the argument in rebuttal and the epilogue.

The attack here is direct and forcible. It is ingenious in showing that the principle that underlies the complaint is precisely the principle that governed the Thirty—a point already made in another connection (§ 20); it includes the stock charge against the professional politicians,—that they are getting rich from their trade; and it brings out distinctly the most serious charge, that they are fomenting discord in a community only just reunited.

The tone of the attack is severe and earnest, but always dignified. There is no display of personal passion. The speaker stands above petty recriminations, and in a most convincing way exposes the conduct of a group of small politicians who were coming to the front on false claims of service in the late civil war, and who were destined to succeed before long in discrediting and thrusting aside the great patriots of the Return.

In style of speech this attack keeps up the strong sentence structure, but the prevailing antitheses become sharper and clearer, particularly in the summary attack of § 30. In § 31 we have a period of the most artificial type, ἐκεῖνοι μὲν ὀλυγαρχίας οὕσης κτλ.: see App. § 57. 7.

In §§ 23 and 24 there is rhetorical play on the sound of words, not ill-fitted to the scornful tone of the attack; see App. § 58. 5.

V. Ἐπίλογος, Peroratio, §§ 35–.

The epilogue ordinarily follows the Παρέκβασις, and the closing sentence of § 34 seems to form the transition from the attack on the prosecution to the prayer to the jury. There is therefore little doubt that the epilogue begins with § 35, and probably little of the speech has been lost by the mutilation of the Ms.

One who has read this speech comes to the close with a definite impression of the personality of the speaker. He is no enthusiast, he has no political sentiment; as a result of his observations of men he has reached the conclusion that all political attachments are determined by personal advantage, — and he is not afraid to express his opinion. This same analysis he brings to the discussion of party policy. He makes no appeal to the honor or generosity of the democratic jury, but with the utmost calmness and penetration he shows them that it is for the interest of their party to approve his candidacy.

We receive the impression that we are listening to a man of experience, of sharp observation of men, and of a personal dignity that forbids equally appeal to the sympathy of the jury and violent invective against his enemies.

The view that the speech embodies a true portrait of the client is most clearly expressed in the following words of Bruns.¹ In the conversation between lawyer and client "the talk would soon pass from personal matters to questions of political principles. The keen lawyer, who had himself had an eventful political experience, would be impressed by his client's views — mature and free from all illusions. The coolness with which he explained all political attachments on the ground of personal interest had its effect upon Lysias, and he counted upon its having its effect upon others. He therefore built up his defense on this idea. He believed that the good impression which he had himself received from the straightforward tone of the speaker — free from all personal small talk,² would not fail in the case of other listeners. And so in his treatment of the case, perhaps at the express request of the speaker, he let him pass quickly from his own person to general questions."

The style is noticeably more rhetorical than is usual with Lysias. In the more elevated parts his usual simplicity of sentence structure gives way to strong periods, with abundant antithesis and parallelism.

² The speech for Mantitheus (XVI) offers a marked contrast in this respect. The young cavalryman is full of talk of his own achievements.
ΔΗΜΟΤ ΚΑΤΑΛΤΣΕΩΣ ΑΠΟΛΟΓΙΑ

1 ἦμῶν μὲν πολλὰν συγγνώμην ἔχω, ὡς ἀνδρὶς δικασταί, ἀκούσοι τοιούτων λόγων καὶ ἀναμμηνησκομένων τῶν γεγενημένων, ὅμως ἀπαςίν ὑγιείςθαι τοῖς ἐν ἂστει μείναι: τῶν δὲ κατηγόρων θαυμάζω, οἷς ἀμελεύοντες 5τῶν οἰκείων τῶν ἄλλωρίων ἐπιμελεύονται, καὶ σαφῶς εἰδότες τούς μηδὲν ἄδικοκύντος καὶ τοὺς πολλὰ ἐξημαρτηκότας ἐκτούσι κερδαίνειν ἢ ὑμᾶς πείθεν περὶ 2ἀπάντων ἴμῶν τὴν γνώμην ταύτην ἔχειν. εἰ μὲν οὖν σοι ὑπὸ τῶν τριακοντα γεγένηται τῇ πόλει 10ἐμοὶ κατηγορηκέναι, ἀδυνάτους αὐτοὺς ἡγοῦμαι λέγειν:

1. τοῖς μένασι: case, see on ὑγιείςθαι 12. 80. — ἂστει: for non-use of the article see on 12. 16. — μηδέν: when a participle or adjective with the article is equivalent to an indefinite relative clause, it takes μή as its negative, as such a clause would do (μή in protasis). Such expressions refer to a class of persons or things, and this neg. may be called “μή generic.” — ἄδικοκύντας, ἐξημαρτηκόtας: note the coupling of pres. and perf. participles; see on ἄδικω

12. 14, and for the perf. (of “guilt”) see on εἰργασμένοι εἰσίν

12. 22. — κερδαίνειν: for interpretation see Crit. Note. — ταύτην: the opinion urged by the complainants, and implied in ὑγιε-ίςθαι.

2. ἡγοῦμαι: this word expresses a more definite and mature conviction than οἷμαι (οἰμαί) or νομίζω. It is significant that this experienced and confident speaker uses ἡγοῦμαι eight times (§§ 2, 5, 6, 7, 11, 17, 18, 29) in the eight (Teubner) pages, and nowhere says νομίζω or οἷμαί.

The thirteenth speech shows a like fondness for οἰμαί (fourteen occurrences in the twenty-one pages), but with the other words for “I think” used twice each. It is possible that in talking with his client Lysias noticed a fondness for this ἡγούμαι, and so gave a natural tone to the speech by its repeated use. Cp. on 19. 15. — ὃς ἐμοὶ . . . αὐτῶν: on the assumption that any charge against them involves me.

— τοὺς λόγους: cp. on 12. 2. — τούτων: see on τούτων 12. 81. — ἐμαυτὸν δὲ τοιοῦτον ὄντα: the antithesis with τούτων μὲν . . . ψευδομένους causes this construction instead of the more common nominative (τοιούτος ὄν); cp. § 4 ἀποφήνω . . . αἰτίως γεγενημένος. — ἐν ἄστει μείνας: had he remained in the city.

3. τούτων μὲν: τούτων rather than αὐτῶν because these complainants are the particular sycophants whom he is attacking. For the greater precision of Greek as compared with Eng. in such use of pronouns cp. on 12. 81, 84. — χρηματίζοντο: blackmail by the threat of bringing innocent men before the courts on trumped-up charges was the regular work of the “sycophants.” The quiet and orderly citizen was often ready to avoid both the reproach and the annoyance of a lawsuit by money payment. Xenophon tells how, by advice of Socrates, Crito finally supported a lawyer of his own to silence these fellows by counter attacks (Mem. 2. 9). The defendant for whom Isocrates wrote the speech against Callimachus began by telling in the streets and the shops that he had been wronged by the defendant; how then the defendant’s friends came to him and advised him to buy Callimachus off, cautioning him that, however confident he was in the justice of his case, he must remember that many things in court turn out con-

See on 16. 3.

4. μηδεμᾶσ: see on μήτε 12. 68 (B). — αἰτιος γεγενημένος: cp. on ἐμαντῶν § 2; HA. 981; G. 1588; B. 661; Gl. 587. — ὑπάρχειν: I may count upon. See on ὑπάρχει 12. 23.

5. τεκμηριον: predicate of the ὅτι clause: I hold the fact that, etc., . . . to be a great proof in my favor. — εἴπερ: see on 12. 27. — ἱδία μὲ ἄδικοντα: crimes of my own. — ἁμαρτήματα, ἐμὸν: construction, see on καταγνώσεται 24. 20. — ὑπέρ: while ὑπέρ usually = in behalf of; it is often used to give the ground of a feeling or action, especially with words of thanking, praising, accusing, punishing, defending, and the like. Cp. 12. 37, 12. 89, 25. 19. For ὑπέρ = τερί see on 24. 4. — μηδέν: see on § 1.

6. ἐγὼ δὲ κτλ.: the normal construction would be as follows: —
under false accusation are a great gain to themselves, viz. ‘the city has enemies enough already, and every false accusation helps them by adding to their number.’

7. οὖς: the rel. for the usual indef. rel. in an indirect question. Cp. 19. 12, 24. 15; ΗΑ. ιοιι ια; G. 1600; B. 490; Gl. 621 α.—προσήκειν: = εἰκός εἶναι. The dat. with προσήκειν is more common than the accus.; cp. § 11 προσήκειν αὐτοῖς ἐπιθυμεῖν; 12. 38 τούτο αὐτῷ προσήκει τοιχία. —οὖδέν: adverbial. —προσήκον: sc. ἔστι.—τῷ πλῆθει: cp. on 12. 42.

8. ὡστε οὐκ ἐλάχιστον κτλ.: 'So that in no small degree it is in your power to secure for the present government a great number of zealous supporters.' This is quite aside from the argument, a parenthetical reminder to the jury that their action to-day will have an important effect upon the support of the new government.— ἐλάχιστον: made emphatic by its wide separation from its noun, μέρος. Note that the English idiom requires here the positive, in no small degree, for the Greek superlative.— μέρος: case, Η.Α. 719; G. 1060; B. 336; Gl. 540. — τῶν παρόντων νυνὶ πραγμάτων: cp. τοῖς καθεστηκόσι πράγμασι § 3, and see on 16. 3.

9. δῆ: Lysias seldom uses δῆ. In the eight speeches of this volume there are seven instances of καὶ μὲν δῆ (see on 12. 30) and only eight of δῆ in other connections. Lysias's sparing use of this vivid and emphatic particle is quite in keeping with the simplicity and moderation of his style (cp. on πάνω 19. 15). The instances of δῆ are the following: (A) To emphasize a preceding word, 12. 34, 12. 62, 22. 5; all with imperatives, a common usage; 34. 1 τότε δῆ. (B) To emphasize the whole statement, 12. 35, 12. 38, 12. 57. (C) To mark a fact as a familiar one, 25. 9; this usage is in other writers especially common with relatives.— Φρύνιχος: a man of the common people, commander in chief of the fleet. He was at first strongly opposed to the oligarchs, but becoming involved in political intrigues he found that his personal safety lay in going over to Pisander. He became one of the most unscrupulous of the oligarchs, and was murdered in the Agora after the reaction against the extreme oligarchs had set in.— Πείσανδρος: he, too, was at first a prominent democrat, and one of the chief movers in the hue and cry raised over the mutilation of the Hermæ as being the work of anti-democratic conspirators. He became the chief executive among those who planned and established the government of the Four Hundred. See Chron. App. 412 B.C. — δημαγογοί: democratic leaders. — εἰς: see on 32. 19. Crit. Note, πρὸς (C) 6. — ἕνοι: the mention of names of those involved in the so recent revolutions is avoided. Under ἕνοι all must think first of Theramenes, to whose faction the speaker probably belonged. — ἐκεῖνος: strictly only the extreme faction of the Four Hundred, expelled by the moderates under lead of Theramenes. See Chron. App. Sept. 411 B.C. — τῶν Ἐλευσινάδε ἀπογραφαμένων: the amnesty provided that any partisans of the Thirty who desired to settle with them in Eleusis should be permitted to do so within twenty days, on condition of enrolling their names within ten days (Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 38, Arist. Resp. Ath. 39. 4). From our passage it appears that some who enrolled their names under the first fear of vengeance from the democracy became convinced of their safety in the city and did not withdraw. — τοὺς μὲθ' αὐτῶν: viz. those who had formerly been with themselves in the city party. Xenophon gives a very brief account of this siege (Hell. 2. 4. 43); he says: "Afterward they (the Athenians), hearing that those at Eleusis were hiring mercenaries, went out against them with all the citizen forces. They killed their generals, who had come into a conference with them, and sent friends and relatives to the others, and persuaded them to a reconciliation." Aristotle (Resp. Ath. 40. 4) places this event in the third year after the withdrawal to Eleusis (401/0 B.C.). For the bearing of this on the date of our speech see Introd. p. 255 n. 1.

10. prós: see on 32. 19 Crit. Note.—ἐκ τούτων: on this basis. —δοκιμάζειν: probably here in the technical sense, L. & S. s.v. II. 2. —ἐν τῇ δημοκρατίᾳ: the (definite) democracy which preceded the rule of the Thirty; cp. ἐν δημοκρατίᾳ § 7, where the less specific reference causes the omission of the article.—ἐγίγνετο: was coming, impf. of an expected event; see on συναπώλλυντο 12. 88.—τῶν πραγμάτων: force, see on 16. 3.

11. ἀτμοί: see on 12. 21.—ἀπεστερημένοι: the tense implies both the past ill-treatment and the abiding resentment resulting from it.—προσήκειν: tense, cp. on ἀντιλέγειν 12. 26. For force and construction see on § 7.—αὐτοῖς (before ἐτέρας): instead of οὗτος analeptic (see on πάντας αὐτοῖς 16. 11). The desire to throw the stress upon προσήκειν causes the use of the less emphatic αὐτοῖς. In the contrasted and emphatic form below we have τούτων (τὰς περὶ τούτων).—αὐτοῖς (before χάριν): to whom. In a coordinate relative clause the Eng. repeats the relative, while the Greek usually carries the idea along by a personal or demons. pronoun, especially if the case changes; HA. 1005; G. 1040; Gl. 615 a. So in 19. 14. But sometimes the pronoun is omitted in the second clause, as in 22. 13 and 21; HA. 1005; G.

12. ἐτέρων πραγμάτων: cp. ἐτέρως πολιτείας § 11. The more common expression is νεώτερα πράγματα (res novae). Cp. on 16. 3.—ἀν ἐπεθύμουν: force, see on ἄν ἦξιον 19. 13.—τετριπηράρχηκα: perf. of “credit,” see on εἰργασμένου εἰς 12. 22. The logical connection would lead us to expect the pluperfect in this and the following verbs, for the argument is that he had these services to his credit at the time when the revolution was under discussion; but all the time the speaker has also in mind the fact that he has these things to his credit now, an argument for a favorable verdict now; so he half unconsciously uses the less logical perfect.—νεανιμάχηκα: see Crit. Note.—λελητοῦργηκα: for such services see on 19. 43.

For the gender see on ταυτὴν 12. 37. — παρ’ ἦμῶν: the people who remained in the city. — τῶν ἐργῶν: the deeds of each individual, contrasted with the words of these complainants.

ἐμοῦ γὰρ ἐν τῇ ὁλιγαρχίᾳ οὔτε ἀπαχθεὶς οὐδεὶς φανήσεται, οὔτε τῶν ἐχθρῶν οὐδεὶς τετιμωρημένος, οὔτε τῶν φίλων εὖ πεπονθός. (καὶ τοῦτο μὲν οὖν ἄξιον θαυμάζειν. εὖ μὲν γὰρ ποιεῖν ἐν ἐκείνῳ τῷ χρόνῳ χαλεπῶν ἦν, ἔξαμαρτάνειν δὲ τῷ Βουλομένῳ ράδιον.) οὗ τοίνυν οὐδ' εἰς τὸν κατάλογον Ἀθηναίων καταλέξας ἡμῶς αὐτοὺς παρέχοντας.—ἀπαχθεὶς: a technical term. The ἀπαγωγή was, under the democracy, a summary process for the arrest and punishment of one caught in a criminal act of the grosser sort. It became a convenient form of law under which the Thirty could cover their arrests and executions; cp. the case of Polemarchus, 12. 25, and cp. on ἑσαγγελίων 12. 48.

16. τοῦτο μὲν: viz. οἰδένα τῶν φίλων εὖ πεπονθέναι. While μὲν without a correlative usually suggests an unexpressed contrast (see on 12. 8) it sometimes, as here, becomes a mere particle of emphasis. The speaker sees that in saying that he had helped no friend, he may meet the retort, “Were you then so contemptible a coward as to refuse to help your friends in such troublous times?” He guards against this by the parenthetical statement.—τὸν κατάλογον: we hear of two “lists” drawn up under the Thirty; one was the list of 3000 who were nominally to enjoy political rights (Xen. Hell. 2. 3. 18), the other a proscription list known to us only by two statements of Isocrates. The speaker in the case against Callimachus, referring to the time of the Thirty, says, “It will be made clear that I have brought upon no citizen loss of money, or peril of life; nor erased his name from those who held political rights, and enrolled him in the list with Lysander (18. 16).” In another plea (21. 2) Isocrates makes the speaker say of his friend Nicias, that after the establishment of the Thirty his enemies erased his name from those who held political rights and enrolled him in the list with Lysander (τὸν μετὰ Λυσάνδρου κατάλογον). This is doubtless the list referred to in our passage. Why it was called the “Lysander list” we can only conjecture; it would be natural that on the drawing up of such a list Lysander would cause the insertion of the names of those who had most persistently held out against reconciliation with Sparta. The existence of such a list gave opportunity for satisfying private enmities, as is clear from the case of Nicias. — Ἄθηναιων: connect with οὐδένα.
— διαταγή: a provision of the Athenian system sent a large class of cases to official arbitrators; see App. § 29. It is not likely that official arbitrators were a part of the system of the Thirty, as the popular courts themselves were abolished. The reference is probably to private arbitration. The custom of thus settling cases out of court was always common. — καταdιατηρήσαμεν: procuring an unfavorable verdict; the active would be used of rendering a verdict.

17. πίστιν δεδωκέναι: cp. 12. 27 οὐ γὰρ . . . πίστιν παρ’ αὐτοῦ ἐλάμβανον. Perfect tense because the emphasis is quite as much on the fact that the jury now have the evidence as upon his having given it. — Cp. on ἀκηκόατε 12. 48.
— δότις: here preferred to δς, because the emphasis is on the characteristic of the man (see on οἶτινες 12. 40), not his identity. By the personal inflection of the verb the Greek combines two ideas that are expressed less simply in Eng. by I, a man who. — ἤ που: these particles, giving emphasis to an apodosis (as in 12. 88), are often strengthened as here by σφόδρα, or as in 12. 35 by γε. — ἄλλα γάρ: for this use in concluding a discussion see on 12. 40.
— εἰς ὑμᾶς: see on εἰς τὰς ναῦς

19. ἐκλέπτον: the stealing of the politicians was as common a theme in ancient, as in modern, times. Athenian politicians seem to have been notoriously open to the charge, if we may trust Chirisoconnections from Homer down. Cp. Thuc. 1. 102 τὴν γενομένην ἐπὶ τῶν Μηδῶν ἐνυμαχίαν the alliance that had been made against the Mede. — ἀφίστασαν: one of the chief causes of the break up of the Athenian empire was the requirement that a large class of cases at law arising in the allied cities be tried at Athens by Athenian courts. The loss of time, the expense of travel, and the uncertainty of justice before a foreign jury were so great that the sycophant found a rich field here. A wealthy foreigner could afford to pay liberally to buy off a threatened prosecution. Under honest administration the system would have been burdensome to the allies; under the actual abuses it became intolerable. — ἄνδρας ἀγαθούς: this was the case at first; see on 12. 5. — ὑπέρ: force, see on § 5. — κοινά: viz. a common charge.

followed by a brief compromise to full democracy, under which a violent reaction set in against all who had had a share in the oli-far that the men who had remained in the city and served in the forces under the Four Hundred were put under a form of ἀτιμία which ex-from the privilege of speaking in Isocrates some time later testifies to the self-restraint of Thrasybulus and Anytus: Θρασύβουλος καὶ Ἀνυτος μέγιστον μὲν δυνάμειν τῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει, πολλῶν δὲ ἀπεστρεφμένου χρημάτων, εἰδότες δὲ τοὺς ἀπογράφαντας, ὁμοὶ οὖ τολμόσων αὐτῶν δίκας λαγχάνειν οὐδὲ μνησικεῖν Thrasybulus and Anytus, who are the most powerful men in the city, and have been robbed of great possessions, though they know who confiscated them, nevertheless are unwilling to bring suit or cherish anger (18. 23). — ειθύνην: possibly an Athenian official did sometimes avoid the required ειθωνα, but it could only be by unusually efficient party machinery or through an overriding personality (like that of Alcibiades), for the legal system of accounting was most minute. It included audit by independent boards, and offered the utmost freedom of complaint to all citizens. Charges like the present one are on a par with the general charges of thievery and rapid enrichment; without the specification of cases they are of little value. Every Athenian official was required every prytany (every thirty-five days) to submit an account of his receipts and expenditures to a board of ten auditors, selected by lot from the Senate. At the close of his term of office he was also required to present complete accounts to another board; see Introd. p. 44.—

πόλεμον: the feeling had been so excited as to lead to the siege of the remnant of the Thirty at Eleusis; but from Xenophon’s account it appears that it was the action of the exiles themselves which led to this. THE SPEECH AGAINST DIOGITON

Diodotus, a wealthy Athenian merchant, married the daughter of his brother, Diogiton. Of this marriage a daughter and two sons were born. Diogiton was thus their uncle on the father's side, and their grandfather on the mother's side.

The father, Diodotus, was called upon in 410 B.C. to join the expedition of Thrasyllus to the coast of Asia Minor, and was killed in the attack on Ephesus (§§ 4–7). Before leaving home he had made a will in which he provided for his sons, and bequeathed to his wife his personal valuables and one talent as dowry in case of her remarriage, and to his daughter one talent as dowry (§ 6).

We have no full inventory of the property, but the plaintiff claims that it included the following sums:

Invested in a loan on bottomry (§§ 6, 14), 7 t. 4000 dr.
Due in the Chersonese (§ 6), 2000 dr.
Left with his wife (§ 6) and turned over by her to Diogiton on the death of her husband (§ 15), 20 minae = 2000 dr.
30 Cyzicene staters = 840 dr.
A mortgage on real estate (§ 15), 100 minae = 1 t. 4000 dr.

Total, 15 t. 840 dr.

1 For the date see Chron. App.
2 The value of the Cyzicene stater is not entirely fixed. See App. § 62.
To this are to be added valuable house furnishings (§ 15). 1

On the death of Diodotus, Diogiton became the guardian of his widowed daughter and her three children. For a time he concealed from them the fact of Diodotus's death, and under the pretext that certain documents were needed for conducting his brother's business, he obtained from his daughter the sealed package of papers that had been left with her (§ 7). After the death of Diodotus became known to her, the widow turned over to Diogiton whatever property was in her possession, to be administered for the family (§ 15).

Diogiton, as guardian of his widowed daughter, arranged a second marriage for her with one Hegemon (§ 12), but gave a sixth less dowry than the will prescribed (§ 8). In due time he arranged a marriage for his granddaughter also (§ 2); there is no claim that he gave with her less than the dowry required by the will. 2

For eight years Diogiton supported the boys from the income of the estate, but when the elder came of age, he called them to him and told them that their father had left for them only 2840 dr., 3 and that this had all been expended for their support; that already he had himself paid out much for them, and that the elder must now take care of himself (§ 9).

The boys, who had supposed that they were to come into a large fortune, at once appealed to their mother, and she hastened to her daughter's husband, as the only representative of the family who might secure justice from her father. But all appeals to Diogiton and all attempts at settlement through family friends

1 The above reckoning assumes that the 2000 dr. of § 15 are the same as the claim of 2000 dr. in the Chersonese (§ 6); but it is quite possible that this is another investment.

2 It would seem that the daughter was married not long before the trial, for in the estimate of reasonable expense for the children the speaker includes provision for the daughter and her maid for the full eight years (§ 28).

3 This was the sum which their mother had turned over to Diogiton in cash, and which he could not deny having received.
were in vain, and the case was brought to court (§§ 10-12). The elder son was the plaintiff, and the daughter's husband, as his συνήγορος, made the main plea for him 1 by delivering this speech, prepared by Lysias.

In the preparation of his defense Diogiton saw that he could not maintain his original claim that he had received only 2840 dr. for the boys. The mother had documentary proof of his having received one sum of 7 t. 4000 dr. (§ 14), and Diogiton now acknowledged in his sworn answer that he had received that sum, but he submitted detailed accounts purporting to show that it had all been used for the family (§§ 20, 28). 2

The date of this speech is determined by the fact that Diodotus died in 410 b.c. (§ 5), and that the boys were under Diogiton's guardianship eight years (§ 29). It is not likely that a suit involving the whole family fortune would be long delayed, so that the trial must be put in 402/1 b.c. or very soon thereafter.

This speech is not contained in our Mss. of Lysias, but the part which we have is preserved in the treatise of Dionysius of Halicarnassus, On the Ancient Orators. 3 After a discussion of the peculiarities of Lysias's style, Dionysius transcribes this speech, with comments after each rhetorical subdivision; unfortunately he does not give the last part of the proof or the epilogue.

1 See App. § 17.
2 It is not clear just how much Diogiton did acknowledge. If he did not retract his first statement, the 2840 dr. must be added to the 7 t. 4000 dr. And then there remains the question whether he included in these sums the money paid in the two dowries. Lysias says in § 20 that Diogiton in his reckoning claimed to have spent the 7 t. 4000 dr. for the two boys and their sister; but it is possible that the mother's and the sister's dowries were reckoned in this total in Diogiton's account.

If we had the documents which were presented in court and the complete speech of Lysias, these points, which seem in our fragment strangely confused, would probably be made clear.

3 Dionysius was a student and teacher of literature who came to Rome in 30 b.c. He taught Rhetoric both by lectures and by published treatises, and published a History of Rome from the earliest times to the beginning of the

II. Διήγησις, Narratio, §§ 4–18.

The action of Diogiton when the eldest son came of age. Protests of the family and their attempts to secure justice out of court. The mother’s plea to her father and its effect on the hearers.

Dionysius has not preserved the epilogue.

Punic Wars. He was an enthusiastic student of classical Greek oratory, and devoted himself to the attempt to revive its pure standards as against the degenerate rhetoric of the later times. He published a treatise on Lysias, Isocrates, and Isaeus, as a part of a work on The Ancient Orators; a second part was to treat of Demosthenes, Hyperides, and Aeschines, but it is uncertain whether it was ever written.

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

1. Ἡρούμον, Exordium, §§ 1–3.

The Greek rhetoricians, and the Romans after them, prescribed three ends to be sought in a proem: the gaining of the good will of the hearers, instructing them as to the case in hand and its proposed treatment, and arousing their attention (εὐνοα, εὐμάθεια, πρόσεξις).

Dionysius¹ in his criticism of the proem of this speech evidently has this definition in mind. He says that in the case of a suit against members of one’s own family the rhetoricians are agreed that the plaintiff must above all things else guard against prejudice on the part of the jury in the suspicion that he is following an unworthy and litigious course. The plaintiff must show that the wrongs which he is attacking are unendurable; that he is pleading in behalf of other members of the family nearer to him and dependent upon him for securing redress; that it would be wicked for him to refuse his aid. He must show further that he has made every attempt to settle the case out of court.

This first quality of the ideal proem, adaptedness to secure the good will of the jury by the means indicated, Dionysius finds in full in our proem.

The second purpose of a proem, the clear instruction of the jury as to the case in hand, Dionysius finds equally well fulfilled. The proem includes a virtual πρόθεσις, which gives all the information that is needed for the understanding of what follows.

The third aim of a proem, the quickening of attention, Dionysius says is to be reached by surprising or even paradoxical statements, and by direct appeal to the jury. These things, too, Dionysius assures us that he finds in this proem, but to the modern reader it seems that his wish to find here all the elements of the ideal proem must have been father to the thought; for there is certainly no touch of the novel or surprising or paradoxical in thought. Some others of Lysias’s proems have these characteristics in a marked degree, but not this one. There is a direct prayer to the jury, but that is brief and not very impressive.

The language of the proem, like that of Lysias’s proems in general, is for the most part periodic. A larger group of thoughts is brought together under a single sentence structure both in § 1 and in §§ 2–3 than is usual with Lysias. The impression is one of dignity and earnestness. There is no rhetorical embellishment either in grouping of cola or in play on words or phrases.

II. Διήγησις, Narratio, §§ 4–18.

Dionysius gives no comment on this “narrative,” but before quoting this speech he had summed up his views of Lysias’s excellence in each part of a speech. He there spoke as follows of his powers in narration (§ 18): “In narration, which in my opinion demands the utmost wisdom and attention, I consider him unquestionably the greatest of all orators, and I declare him to be the measure and standard (ἄρον τι καὶ κανόνα). And I believe that the treatises on the theory of rhetoric which contain anything valuable on the subject of ‘narration’ have derived their inspiration and their precepts from no source more than from the works of Lysias. For his narratives excel in conciseness and clearness. No others are so charming and persuasive. They convince you ‘before you are aware, so that it is not easy to find any narrative as a whole, or any part of one, that is false or unconvincing. Such persuasion and charm are in his speech, and so completely do the hearers forget to ask whether it is true or fictitious.”

This enthusiasm of Dionysius for Lysias’s narratives is justified, and in no case more fully than in that of the narrative under discussion. This, like the great narrative of the arrest in XII, and the even greater narrative in I — an honest husband’s story of the seduction of his young wife by an aristocrat — has the persuasive power of simple and clear speech. But in this narrative there is a stroke of genius that places it above even the other two. This is the introduction of the mother's plea in her own words. The mother could not plead in court, but by picturing the scene in the family council Lysias carries the jurors in imagination to that room where a woman pleads with her father, protesting against the unnatural greed that has robbed his own grandsons, and begging him to do simple justice to her children. As the jurors heard how the hearers of that plea arose and left the room, silent and in tears, there was little need for argument.

Here, again, Lysias secures his result by the simplest means. As he talked in his office with his clients and heard their story of the family meeting, and how the mother of the boys had pleaded with her father, he had the insight to see that the central point of the prosecution should be to make the jury see this case as the mother saw it. Her view of it moved him, and he knew it would move the jury. His work was to take this narrative from the lips of his clients, to preserve its naturalness and simplicity, to suppress non-essentials, and to bring out the points of real power, condensing and clarifying all. The result was a work of art perfect in the concealment of art.

The language is, as in Lysias's narratives generally, of the simplest form. For the most part the sentences are short. When they are expanded, it is by a series of simple coördinate cola, binding the thoughts without making the whole complex. So the long narrative sentence of § 5. The long sentence of § 10 is a typical example of the running, in distinction from the periodic, structure.1 But, as often in Lysias, the simple narrative is concluded by a strong, amplified sentence, in full periodic form (see App. § 44) :—

III. Πρόθεσις, Proposito, §§ 18, 19.
A brief πρόθεσις introduces the affidavits of witnesses and the discussion of the guardian’s accounts as filed with the court.

IV. Πίστευς, Argumentatio.
We know from Dionysius¹ that the argument on the accounts submitted by Diogiton fell into two parts: A, Discussion of the use that Diogiton claims to have made of the property which he admits he has received from the estate; B, Proof that he has received a much larger sum than he admits. The second part is not included in what is preserved.

The examination of the alleged expenditures is sharp and clear. The overcharge seems written on the face of every item, and the series culminates in a case of the most shameless fraud (§§ 26, 27). The most striking characteristic of this convincing argument is the Lysian brevity. Out of an accounting of eight years Lysias selects a very few typical items, makes the most of them in a brief, cutting comment, and then passes on before the hearers are wearied with the discussion of details.

The language is in short and rounded periods. Vigor and terseness prevail in it all, and there is an occasional sharpening of expression by rhetorical device. Antitheses are common as in all vigorous speech of Lysias, and some are heightened by rhyming of the final words of cola (ὀμοιοτέλευτον, see App. 57. 4).

§ 19. ἐν τοὺς μὲν νεανίσκους διὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῶν συμφορῶν ἐλέησητε, τοῦτον δὲ ἀπασί τοῖς πολέμασι ἄξιον ὁργῆς ἡγήσησθε.

§ 25. καῦτοι εἶ μὲν τὰς ἐξήμισας τούτων ἀποδείξει τὰ δὲ σωθέντα τῶν χρημάτων αὐτῶς ἔξει ὅπως μὲν ἄνήλωται τὰ χρήματα οὗ χαλεπῶς εἰς τὸν λόγον ἐγγράψει ῥαδίως δὲ ἐκ τῶν ἀλλοτρίων αὐτὸς πλουτήσει.

The word play (παρονομασία, App. § 58. 5) in § 22, a turn of speech rare in Lysias, but a favorite with the rhetoricians, is fitted to the sarcastic tone:—

ἰνα γράμματα αὐτῶς ἄντι τῶν χρημάτων ἀποδείξειν.

The personification in § 23, a figure equally rare in Lysias (Introd. p. 25. n. 5), is in the same sarcastic tone:—

ἥγοιμενος δεῖν τὴν αὐτοῦ πονηρίαν κληρονόμον εἴναι τῶν τοῦ τεθνε-ῶτος χρημάτων.

§ 24 offers a striking instance of Lysias's power of condensation. Each of the four brief phrases adds an incriminating feature of the action:—

οὗτος δὲ πάππος ὃν | παρὰ τῶν νόμων | τῆς ἑαυτοῦ τριηραρχίας | παρὰ τῶν θυγατριδῶν | τὸ ἡμίουν πράττεται.

Of ἥθος, in the ordinary sense, the nice fitting of thought and speech to the personality of the speaker, so that the individuality of the man stands out in his plea, there is nothing here. The speaker might be any Athenian gentleman; we get no impression of his age or temperament or character.

Some see definite ἥθος in the mother's speech, but it is rather the ἥθος of womanhood and motherhood than of this particular mother.

But there is another form of portraiture, closely allied to ἥθος, the picturing of the character, not of the speaker, but of his opponent. We have certainly a personal portrait of Diogiton, and this by the simple recital of his words and conduct. There is no piling up of opprobrious epithets. By his own conduct greed is shown to have been the one principle of his life, from the time when he married his daughter to his brother to keep hold of his increasing property, to the day when, with hollow professions of regret and with shameless lies, he turned his grandsons out of doors.

Note. — τέ: the simple τέ (without καί or a correl. τέ) is very rarely used in prose to connect single words; its use to connect clauses (as here) is common in Herod. and Thuc., less common in Xen., and rare in the orators (Kühn. II. ii. p. 242). Cp. § 22, and 1. 17, 13. 1, 31. 2. It is Lysias's one bit of old-fashioned syntax. See Introd. p. 25.— ἔλαττον ἐχοντες: being worsted, injured. φεύγειν δῖκας is the usual term for for gaining time. If a party time set for trial, he lost his case courts was called ἡ ἔρημος δίκη;

it was before a board of arbi-

Out of this grew the tendency to encourage marriage between near relatives (cp. Lysias’s own marriage, Introd. p. 23) in order to keep the family property intact. A man might even marry his half-sister if she was of a different

5. καταλεγεῖς: the names of all citizens liable to military service (men between eighteen and sixty years of age) were kept publicly posted in an official list. When troops were to be called into service a special decree of the Ecclesia determined the ages within which the draft should be made. Out of these available names the military authorities selected as many as were needed for the immediate emergency, and posted a list, which became the official roll. Such a list is here referred to.—

Θρασύλλου: 410 B.C. See Chron. App. While Alcibiades was operating on the Hellespont, Thrasyllus was sent out to the coast of Asia Minor, with a force of 1000 hoplites, 100 cavalry, and 50 triremes (Xen. Hell. 1. 1. 34). Xenophon, who was one of these cavalrymen, has left a detailed account of the preliminary skirmishes of the expedition, and of their severe defeat before Ephesus (Hell. 1. 2. 1–9). Thrasyllus was an efficient and popular general, an opponent of the Four Hundred, and closely associated with Thrasybulus. It is a wise thought to let the jury know that the father of the plaintiff lost his life under their popular general.—

6. For the value of the sums mentioned see App. § 61.—νυν-

system of loans on vessels or their cargoes. There was no system of maritime insurance, while the primitive means of navigation, the prevalence of piracy, and the frequent dangers by war made the risks greater than in modern times. Accordingly the rates of interest were high; 12 per cent was common, and the rate sometimes went above 30 per cent. The papers in each case specified definitely the limits of place and time within which the voyage was to be made. In this period of the war the dangers were particularly great. — μνᾶς . . . : editors assume a lacuna here, for in § 15 we find that the family claimed an item of 100 minae on a real estate mortgage. The 2000 dr. of § 15 may be the 2000 dr. loaned in the Chersonese (§ 6). — δισχιλίας: sc. δραχμάς, which is often omitted with numbers. — ἐπιδοῦναι: as dowry (cp. on 16. 10 and 19. 14); δοῦναι, a personal gift. — τὰ ἐν τῷ δωματίῳ: cp. 12. 10. — τῇ θυγατρί: i.e. as dowry on her marriage. — κατέλιπε: not to be understood of the will; he ‘left’ this sum in cash with his wife on his departure; after his death she turned it over to her father (§ 15).

7. ἀντίγραφα: the plural is generally used of a single ‘copy,’ probably from the connection with τὰ γράμματα, but the singular occurs, as in Andoc. i. 76, Demos. 36. 7. The original will was left with Diogiton (§ 5); the copy was left at Diodotus's own house, probably sealed up with the other papers (§ 7). — ἐκρυπτε: impf. of an attempted action (which succeeded for a time). — ἀνδρός . . . : see Crit. lost words are τὰ δ' ἀντίγραφα, for that assumption explains the fact that the speaker makes no use of a copy of the will in his plea. — τὰ γράμματα: the notes for the several loans.

8. τὰ νομιζόμενα: Xenophon says that those who died fighting before Ephesus were buried at Notium (Hell. 1. 2. 11). The ‘rites’ here referred to were probably in connection with the dedication of a cenotaph at Athens (the μνῆμα of § 21), according to a common custom. — ἐν Πειραιαῖ διητόντο: they ‘lived on’ at the Piraeus, where the father had naturally fixed his residence because of his foreign trade. At the end of the year the boys were sent to their grandfather’s house in the city in the deme Collytus (§ 14); they afterward removed with his family to another house (τὴν Φαίδρου οἰκίαν § 14); apparently the heirs claim that the last house was purchased with money of the estate, for when the grandfather proposes to send them out to care for themselves, their mother says he is casting them ἐκ τῆς οἰκίας τῆς αὐτῶν (§ 16). — αὐτοῦ: the adverb. — ἐπιλειπόντων: note the force of the present, as compared with κατελέεπτο above. — εἰς ἄστυ: see on 12. 16. — ἐκδιδοὺν: Diogiton became the head of the family, as the oldest son was a minor; it rested with him therefore to arrange the second marriage; we learn the name of the husband from § 12. — πεντακισχιλίας: cp. on 16. 10. The amount, though not niggardly, is small for a wealthy family.

The statement that the boys would have been as rich as any boys in the city (having about 12 t. after the payment of expenses for the eight years and of dowries for mother and sister) seems reasonable from what we know of Athenian fortunes. The war and the internal political troubles had impoverished the older rich families, and had pressed even harder upon the merchants, whose foreign trade had been destroyed, while their public burdens were enormous. The fabulously rich men of the older generation, Nicias and Callias, were popularly supposed to have had fortunes of 100 and 200 talents. But a man who had 8 to 10 talents at the close of the Peloponnesian War was a rich man. In comparing these with modern fortunes we must remember that property yielded from three to four times as much interest as now, that the price of living and of labor was very low (see App. § 63 ff.), and above all that the habits of life were simple. Demosthenes's father was a rich man, having property about equal to that in question here (about $15,000), but his house was estimated as worth only $540 (cp. on 19. 29). It was only after Alexander's conquests had brought Oriental ideas of luxury and the means to grow rich by conquest and by trade on a large scale, that the Greek family needed very much money to be "rich." ON THE CONSTITUTION

This speech was written immediately after the return of the democratic exiles from the Piraeus, for a citizen to deliver in opposition to a motion that under the restored democracy the franchise be restricted to holders of real estate and to men of pure Athenian descent.1

By the amnesty effected under the mediation of the Spartan king, Pausanias, the two opposing parties were now reunited. The past was to be forgotten, the exiles restored to their homes, and the orderly life of the city taken up again. Pending the election of officers and the establishment of courts, a provisional administration was set up by the election of twenty men as a governing board, doubtless made up of ten from each party (Andoc. i. 81).

The first question to be settled, before senators or other officers could be chosen or courts put into operation, was that of the franchise. Should citizenship with full political rights be open to all Athenian men as before the oligarchical revolution, or should it be restricted according to the understanding with Sparta the year before in connection with the surrender?2

1 The first restriction only is mentioned by Dionysius in his introduction, but the second is implied in oũτε γένει ἄπελανθμένος § 3; it was far less important than the first.

2 Usener (Jahrb. 1873, p. 164 ff.) holds that the men of the lowest class were not admitted to the first deliberations after the Return, but that the restriction of the franchise which had been legally adopted in connection with the establishment of the Thirty was considered as still in force. He holds that the question now under discussion was that of the continuance of
XXXIV. ON THE CONSTITUTION

It might well be presumed that the restoration of the democratic constitution would be considered an affront to Sparta, and it is possible that the Spartans had made definite statements to this effect. Moreover, the large body of conservatives who had, both in the revolution of 411 and in that of 404, sought to exclude the lowest class from political privileges, feared now more than ever to see the Demos brought back to power, embittered as the democratic exiles were by their sufferings and flushed with success. Who could guarantee the loyalty of the Demos to the terms of the amnesty, when once demagogue and sycophant should resume their trade?

This, too, seemed to be a good opportunity to clear the voting lists of many names of men of doubtful descent, who had been admitted to citizenship in recent years because of the great losses this restriction, and that the assembly for which the speech of Lysias was written included only the men of the upper classes. Usener finds support for this view in the fact that the appeal in our speech is constantly to the men of property, and, by supplying πόλιν with τὴν ὑμετέραν, § 5, he obtains explicit confirmation of the statement that on their return the Demos did not take part in the administration (αὐτὸς δὲ ταύτης οὐκ ἔτολμησε μετασχεῖν). Wilamowitz (Aristoteles u. Athen, II, p. 225 ff.) finds confirmation of Usener’s view in the statement of Aristotle (Resp. Ath. 39. 6) that under the amnesty the former officials of the city party were to give their accounting before the citizens whose names were on the assessors’ lists (τοῖς τὰ τιμῆματα παρεχομένοις), i.e. the men of the upper classes; from this he concludes that this body formed the citizen body during the interval between the Return and the settlement of the permanent form of government. But the very fact that the amnesty provides that only property holders shall audit the accounts of officers of the city party implies that the government in general is to be in the hands of the whole people. Nor does the theory of the exclusion of the Thetes from the suffrage accord with the address of Thrasybulus immediately after the return, when he reminds the members of the city party that they are being handed over like muzzled dogs to the Demos (Xen. Hell. 2. 4. 41).

In our speech of Lysias the appeal is certainly to the property holders, but that is natural in any case, for the result will turn on their action. For the position against Usener, see Blass, p. 449 ff.; Meyer, Forschungen zur alten Geschichte, II, p. 177, n. 1.

1 Cp. § 6.
of citizens by war, but who were really ineligible under the constitution. For, since the amendment of Pericles in 451/0 B.C., those who could not show pure Athenian descent through both parents had been by law excluded from citizenship. Not only was it thought wise now to clear the lists of such names, but it was evident that the practically obsolete law must be revived to guard against the incoming of many new applicants, sons of Athenians who had until recently lived among the tributary states of the empire. These citizens had married foreign wives, and now many of them with their families were returning to Athens, bringing with them the question of admitting their half-Athenian sons to citizenship.

The two proposals were formally brought before the people by motion of Phormisius. He had been a well-known soldier in the war, and was one of the leading supporters of Theramenes. The death of his party chief and the suppression of the moderate aristocrats by Critias drove him over to the democrats, and he shared their exile and return. It was natural that upon the reorganization of the democracy he should attempt to embody in the new constitution the principle for which Theramenes had always stood, a moderate limitation of the franchise. But his well-known record as a supporter of one faction of the oligarchs gave point to the charge that he was still an oligarch at heart, and had joined the democrats at the Piraeus only to secure his own safety (§ 2).

1 Schaefer, Demosthenes, I. 139.
2 Aristophanes makes sport of Phormisius's hairy face and military bearing (Frogs, 965 f., 405 B.C.); he calls him a trumpeting-whiskered-lancer, a gnashing-pinebender.
3 Arist. Resp. Ath. 34. 3. 4 § 2 of our speech, Dionysius, Lysias, § 32.
5 Of the later fortunes of Phormisius we know only that he was a prominent member of an unsuccessful embassy to Susa just before the Peace of Antalcidas (the poet Plato, Πρεσβευς, Fr. 119–121, Kock), and that he in some way escaped the condemnation that befell a part of the embassy on their return (Dem. 19. 277), for we hear of him as one of the Athenians who in 379 gave active support to the Theban exiles in recovering their city from the Spartan garrison (Din. 1. 38).
XXXIV. ON THE CONSTITUTION

To his proposal the democratic leaders of the Return were opposed. They insisted on the political rights of their poorer comrades, and some were ready even to grant citizenship tometics and slaves who had shared their dangers.

The outcome was the defeat of Phormisius's motion, and the reënactment of the old Solonian constitution as a temporary form of government. To a special commission, acting with the Senate, was intrusted the preparation and adoption of such amendments as they might judge to be necessary to adapt it to present conditions.1 The conservatives were probably placated by the terms of the enactment, which read: ἐδοξε τῷ δήμῳ, Τεωσαμενὸς εἶπε, πολιτεύεσθαι Ἀθηναίοις κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, νόμοις δὲ χρήσθαι τοῖς Σόλωνοις, καὶ μέτροις καὶ στάθμοις, χρήσθαι δὲ καὶ τοῖς Δράκαντοις θεσμοῖς, οἶσπέρ ἐχρώμεθα ἐν τῷ πρόσθεν χρόνῳ (Andoc. 1. 83). This, if taken literally, would mean that, while the franchise was to be open to all classes, and all would have seats on the juries, the other political privileges of the lower classes, which had grown into the constitution since Solon’s time, would be cut off, and a really conservative democracy would result. This may have been the effect during the short time occupied by the Constitutional Commission in making the revision, but when their work was completed it was found that the Periclean type of democracy, and not the Solonian, was the result.

One part of Phormisius’s proposal was, however, renewed in the same year, when Aristophon carried a motion that the sons of foreign mothers be excluded from the franchise; but this action was too sweeping, and it was soon so modified by the resolution of Nicomenes that the exclusion was not retroactive, but applied only to sons born after 403.2

Not content with defeating the essential provisions of Phormisius’s motion, the democrats two years later carried a motion

1 That our speech was not written for delivery before the commission is clear from the fact that the address is not to senators but to citizens (§§ 1, 3, 9, 11), and that the appeal is not to men acting for others, but for themselves.
2 Schaefer, Demosthenes, I, 138 ff.
of Thrasybulus that the franchise be extended to all who had shared in the Return from the Piraeus. But one of their own leaders, Archinus, succeeded in annulling it in the courts as unconstitutional. But, as a compromise, citizenship was granted to the little group of foreigners who had stood with the first small band of exiles at Phyle.

COMMENTS ON ARGUMENT AND STYLE

This speech of Lysias is of especial interest as being his earliest extant speech, and perhaps the first that he wrote for a client. It is, moreover, the only extant speech of his composed for delivery before the Ecclesia. We owe its preservation to Dionysius of Halicarnassus, who incorporated it in his treatise on Lysias, as an example of his style.

It is generally assumed that the speech as preserved by Dionysius is only a fragment. While it is complete in thought, and while §§ 10–11 would form a fitting peroration, yet the speech

2 A part of the original record of this act was discovered on the Acropolis in 1884. It contains also a mutilated list of the metics who received citizenship, a group of humble laboring men; among them are “Chaeredemus the farmer, Leptines the cook, Demetrius the carpenter, Euphorion the muleteer, Hagesias the gardener, Sosias the fuller,” and others of like occupation, while among these good Greek names stands Bendiphanes, a name to shock the blue-blooded Athenian who should find it on the check-list of his tribe. It is probable that this decree was moved by Archinus, who was the mover of the decree bestowing honors upon the citizens of the Phyle band (Aeschin. 3. 187, 190), and who would naturally, after defeating the more generous proposal of Thrasybulus, be the man to present the alternative proposition. The decree for the metics of Phyle was passed in 401/0 (Koerte, MAI. XXV, p. 394, against von Prrott, ibid. p. 37) and its natural connection with the motion of Thrasybulus warrants Meyer (Gesch. d. Alt. V. 222) in carrying that motion over to the same year, against the corrupt account of the biographers of Lysias, who place it immediately after the Return (ἐπὶ ἀναρχίας τῆς πρὸ Ἐκκλείδου, Ps.-Plut. 835 F). For other considerations in favor of this date see Meyer, l.c.
3 See p. 285, n. 3.
seems too brief for the occasion. Neither of the two other speeches preserved by Dionysius is given in full, and it is probable that he took this part from the beginning of a longer speech. Appeals to members of the former city party and to the class in danger of disfranchisement may have followed.

The uncertainty as to the relation of the extant fragment to the whole speech makes it impossible to determine the relations of its subdivisions, or to judge of its effectiveness. The plan of this part is simple: to appeal to the great middle class, men who have shared in the exile and the Return, and to convince them that the loss of the support of the non-landholding citizens will be more dangerous to the restored democracy than the chance of offending Sparta by failing to meet her wishes as to the revision of the constitution. The event proved the soundness of the argument. Sparta did not interfere (see on § 6), and the democracy was soon called upon to take up arms again against the oligarchs at Eleusis.

In the composition of the speech two facts are significant: first, the meaning is not always clear. One must read and reread before being sure of the meaning of some sentences, and some are capable of widely differing interpretations; much is left to be supplied between the lines. The brevity is like Lysias, but not the obscurity. Second, there is a marked rhetorical coloring in the whole. The tricks of the current rhetoric are conspicuous—repeated antithesis and balance of cola, the rhyming of successive cola, and play on the sound of words. We may probably see in these features evidence of immaturity in practical oratory. Up to this time Lysias had written only for exhibition and for hearers who cared more for novelty of expression than clearness of thought. The language of this first public speech is not clear enough for argument in the Ecclesia, and it has too many marks of the rhetorician to be put into the mouth of a client.

How soon and how thoroughly Lysias corrected both faults, we see in the speech against Diogiton (written a year or two later) and that for Mantitheus (some ten years later).
ARGUMENT AND STYLE

The more noteworthy rhetorical expressions are the following:

§ 4. ὃν ὑμεῖς ἀντεχόμενοι βεβαιῶς δημοκρατήσεσθε tῶν δὲ ἐχθρῶν πλέον ἐπικρατήσετε ἀφελιμότεροι δὲ τοὺς συμμάχους ἔσεσθε.

πολλοὺς μὲν αὐτῶν ἀποθανόντας πολλοὺς δ' ἐκ τῆς πόλεως ἐκπεσόντας.\(^1\)

§ 5. οὔδὲ τοὺς λόγους πιστοτέρους τῶν ἔργων οὔδὲ τὰ μέλλοντα τῶν γεγενημένων νομεῖτε.

οἱ τῷ μὲν λόγῳ τῷ δήμῳ πολεμοῦσι τῷ δὲ ἔργῳ τῶν ἀμετέρων ἐπιθυμοῦσιν.

§ II. ὅτε μὲν ἐφεύγομεν ἐμαχόμεθα Λακεδαιμονίοις

ινα κατέλθωμεν κατελθόντες δὲ φεύξόμεθα

ινα μὴ μαχόμεθα.

The last period is quoted in Aristotle, Rhetoric, 2. 23, as follows:

ei φεύγοντες μὲν ἐμαχόμεθα ὡς κατέλθωμεν κατελθόντες δὲ φεύξόμεθα ὡς μὴ μαχόμεθα.

The rhetoricians have evidently worked over the period to make it even more formal. See App. § 57. 7.

ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΤ ΜΗ ΚΑΤΑΛΤΣΑΙ ΤΗΝ ΠΑΤΡΙΟΝ ΠΟΛΙΤΕΙΑΝ ΑΘΗΝΗΣΙ

1. Ὅτε ἐνομίζομεν, δ' ἄνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι, τὰς γεγενημένας συμφορὰς ἰκανὰ μνημεία τῇ πόλει καταλεῖφθαι, ὦστε μηδ' ἂν τοὺς ἐπιγνιγομένους ἐτέρας πολιτείας ἐπιθυμεῖν, τότε δὴ οὔτοι τοὺς κακῶς πεπονθότας καὶ ἀμφοτέρων πεπεραμένους ἔξαπατήσαι ζητοῦσι τοῖς αὐτοῖς ψηφίσμασιν, οἴσπερ καὶ πρότερον διὰ ἡδῆ. καὶ τοὺς μὲν οὐ θαυμάζω, ὡμοῖον δὲ τῶν ἀκρωμένων, ὅτι πάντων ἐστὶ ἐπιληψιμονεστατοί ἡ πᾶσχει ἑτοιμότατοι κακῶς ὑπὸ τοιούτων ἄνδρῶν, οὗ τῇ μὲν τύχῃ τῶν Πειραέων: see on 12. 1. — πολιτείας: polity, form of government; cp. on § 3. — δῆ: force, see on 25. 9 (A). — οὕτωι: Phormisius and his supporters; see Introd. p. 315. — ἀμφοτέρων: both constitutions, democratic and oligarchical. — οἴσπερ: see on οἴτινες 12. 40. — καὶ πρότερον: for καὶ in comparisons see on 19. 2 (C). — διὰ ἡδῆ: one of the first steps in the institution of the oligarchies of the Four Hundred and of the Thirty was the exclusion of the masses from political rights.

2. ὡμοῖον: the appeal throughout the speech is to the members of the upper classes. They form a large majority of a full ecclesia, and their vote will decide the question. Some of them have been supporters of the Thirty, others have just returned with Thrasybulus from exile. (On the number of the Thetes see on § 4.) — Πειραέωι: locative, HA. 220; G. 296; B. 76 n.; Gl. 527. Cp. on 12. 50. For the connection of Phormisius with the party of the Piraeus see Introd. p. 315.
10 ἰπαυλίτας τραγμάτων μετέσχον, τῇ δὲ γνώμῃ τῶν ἐξ ἄστεως. καίτοι τί ἔδει φεύγοντας κατελθεῖν, εἰ χειροτονοῦντες ὑμᾶς αὐτοὺς καταδουλώσεσθε; ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν, ὡς Ἀθηναῖοι, οὔτε οὐσία τῆς πολιτείας οὔτε γένει ἀπελαυνόμενος, ἀλλὰ ἀμφότερα τῶν ἀντιλεγόντων πρὸ-15 τερός ὡν, ἤγοναι ταύτην μόνην σωτηρίαν εἶναι τῇ πόλει, ἀπασίν Ἀθηναίοις τῆς πολιτείας μετείναι, ἐπεὶ ὅτε καὶ τὰ τείχη καὶ τὰς ναῦς καὶ χρήματα καὶ συμμάχους ἐκεκτήμεθα, οὐχ ὅπως τινὰ Ἀθηναῖον ἀπώσομεν διενούμεθα, ἀλλὰ καὶ Εὔβοεσιν ἐπιγαμίαν ἐποιοῦμεθα. νῦν δὲ καὶ τοὺς ὑπάρχοντας πολίτας ἀπελῶμεν; 4 οὗτοι, ἔκανεν ἐμούγεν πείθησθε, οὗτοὶ μετὰ τῶν τείχων καὶ ταύτα ἡμῶν αὐτῶν περιαιρησόμεθα, ὑπλίτας πολλοὺς — κατελθεῖν: force, see on 16. 4.

— καταδουλώσεσθε: future tense of an action intended, proposed (= μέλλω with infin.). See on ei peis 24. 13.

3. πολιτείαι: citizenship. See Crit. Note. — γένει: see Introd. p. 314 f. — Εὔβοεσιν ἐπιγαμίαν: as a mark of special gratitude or friendship Athens sometimes con- ferred upon individual foreigners, and even upon cities, the privileges of intermarriage (ἐπιγαμία), acquisition of real estate in Attica (ἐγκτήσις γῆς καὶ οἰκίας, cp. p. 10, N. 1), and exemption from the metic’s tax (ἀτέλεια, cp. p. 9). Close connection with Euboea was always of the utmost importance to Athens. The ἐπιγαμία not only bound the states together, but enabled the Athenian cle- ruchs, who were settled there in large numbers, to intermarry with their neighbors. The sons of such marriage had full Athenian citizenship. — ὑπάρχοντας: force, see on ὑπάρχει 12. 23.

4. μετὰ τῶν τείχων: the Long Walls had been torn down the year before under the terms of the surrender. For μετά see on 19. 14. — περιαιρησόμεθα: Lysias assumes that if the masses are disfranchised they can no longer be called out with the citizen troops. Deprived of their rights in the state, they could not be trusted to fight for it. — ὑπλίτας, ἵππεας, τοξότας: the regular hoplites and horsemen were of the higher property classes, and would not be affected by this change. But under the pressure of the long war the state had come to make considerable use of the Thetes beyond their regular service as rowers of the triremes (see on 16. 14). With the annihilation of the navy the work as rowers had ceased, so Lysias naturally speaks only of their other service. Perhaps he has in mind also the fact that many members of the classes that regularly furnished hoplites and horsemen are now by loss of property reduced to the class of Thetes. Dionysius says (Lysias, § 32) that about 5000 men would have been excluded from citizenship by this motion. The number of Thetes at the beginning of the Peloponnesian War is estimated at about 20,000 (Meyer, Forschungen zur alten Geschichte II. 168 ff.). The greatest losses of life in the war fell upon them through their service in the fleet. — δημοκρατήσε-σθε: the oligarchy had but just been put down; some of its leaders and many of its supporters were now settled at Eleusis; the future of the democracy was still matter of anxiety (cp. 12. 35; spoken soon after). — τῶν ἐχθρῶν: the exiled oligarchs. — τοῖς συμμάχουσι: the Spartans. One of the conditions of surrender was alliance with Sparta (τὸν αὐτὸν ἐχθρὸν καὶ φίλον νομίζοντας Λακεδαιμονίους ἐπεσθαί καὶ κατὰ γῆν καὶ κατὰ θαλατταν ὅποι ἃν ἡγόνται Χεν. Hell. 2. 2. 20). It had been urged that the proposed measure must be passed to please the Spartans. Lysias says that a united people will be a more useful ally. — ἐφ’ ἡμῶν: see on 12. 17. — οὐ τοὺς γῆν κτλ.: 'the advocates of the measure urge you to intrust your welfare to the holders of real estate; but experience has proved that against the oligarchs, your past and present enemies, the landholders are powerless; it is only the strength of the Demos that can protect you.'
5. ἐκπεσόντας: see on ἐξέτεσον 12. 57. — καταγαγών: cp. on κατελθεῖν 16. 4. — τὴν ὑμετέραν: sc. γῆν. Much property had been confiscated by the Thirty, much abandoned in the flight of the owners. The restored Demos put the owners back into possession, and made no attempt at a distribution of land among themselves. For a different interpretation, by supplying πόλιν with τὴν ὑμετέραν (from ἔχοντας τὴν πόλιν above) see Introd. p. 313 n. 2. — αὐτὸς δὲ . . . οὐκ ἐτόλμησε: while themselves not venturing. An English speaker would use the logical subordination for this clause; see on 12. 47. — τὰ μέλλοντα: sc. πιστότερα. — ἐπιθυμούσιν: the facts justify this charge. The Thirty had not been content with robbingmetics, but had made themselves feared and hated by the citizen property owners. — ὅμας: the men of the upper classes, the holders of property.

6. εἶτα: see on 12. 26 (C). — τοιούτων ἡμῖν ὑπαρχόντων: force, see on ὑπάρχει 12. 23. — ποιήσομεν: 'monitory,' see on ἀφήσωσιν 12. 35. — κελεύονσιν: see Introd. p. 314. The event showed that the Spartan insistence upon dictating in the internal affairs of Athens had been due to the personal influence of Lysander. With his fall from power this policy was abandoned, and the restored Athenian democracy was left undisturbed. — τούτους ἐλπεῖν ἄξιοι: I call upon them to tell. τούτους, the κελεύουσιν; ἐγὼ δὲ τούτους εἰπεῖν ἄξιον, τὸς τῶν πλήθει περιγενήσεται, εἰ ποιήσωμεν ἄκεινοι προστάττουσιν; ἐὰν δὲ μὴ, πολὺ κάλλιον μαχομένως ἀποθνήσκειν ἢ τῇ φανερῶς ἡμῶν αὐτῶν θάνατον καταψήφισασθαι. ἡγούμαι γὰρ, ἐὰν μὲν πείσω, ἀμφοτέρους κοινῶν εἶναι τὸν κίνδυνον. ὅρω δὲ καὶ Ἀργείους καὶ Μαντινέας τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχοντας γνώμην τὴν αὐτῶν οἰκοῦντας, τοὺς μὲν regular word for the opponents in court or debate; see on τούτου 12. 81.—τίς: sc. σωτηρία.—τῷ πλήθει: force, see on 12. 42.—ἐκεῖνοι: the Spartans.—ἐὰν δὲ μὴ κτλ.: ‘but if they cannot tell that, it is much better for us to die fighting than to condemn ourselves to certain death.’

7. ἡγούμαι κτλ.: the proposal of Phormisius involves extreme danger to one part (τῷ πλήθει) of the state; the speaker admits that his own policy also involves danger, but he holds that it is the more honorable course (κάλλιον), because both parties in the state (ἀμφοτέρους) will share the danger.

—ὁρῶ δὲ κτλ.: he has said, “It is better to die fighting”; but now he shows that, after all, there is no likelihood of things coming to that pass. The example of the Argives and Mantineans shows that a people weaker than Sparta may venture to administer their own affairs, knowing that Sparta will not take the risk of losing what she has in the hopeless attempt to enslave a determined people. Argos never followed the lead of Sparta except under compulsion, or by the action of her own oligarchical faction, which sought supremacy by Spartan support. In 418 Argos was forced into alliance with Sparta, and an oligarchical government was set up. But in the next year a successful democratic reaction carried the state over to the Athenian alliance, and with more or less of vigor it supported Athens throughout the war. Mantinea, which had joined Argos against Sparta, was like her forced by the events of 418 to return to the Spartan alliance, and remained nominally under Sparta’s lead throughout the war. But she maintained her democratic constitution, and gave only indifferent support to the Spartans.—τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχοντας γνώμην: ‘although maintaining the same policy that I advise,’ i.e. that of refusing to abandon democratic government at Spartan dictation,—τὴν αὐτῶν οἰκοῦντας:
holding their own territory, i.e. against any attempt of Sparta to dislodge them as dangerous neighbors.

8. ίσασι: sc. Λακεδαιμόνιοι, see Crit. Note. — καὶ πολλὰκις κτλ.: even if they invade them again and again. In fact, they have ceased invading. For καὶ εἰ see on 16. 2. — πολλὰκις, πολλὰκις: on the ἐπαναφορά see App. § 57. 5. — τούτων: the Argives and Mantineans. — ὡστε . . . δοκεῖ εἶναι: so that the risk seems to them (the Spartans) to be inglorious. If the Spartans conquer, they know that they will not succeed in enslaving the Argives and Mantineans, for both peoples always rise up again after their defeats, as stubborn as ever. It is not worth while, then, for the Spartans to risk serious losses of their own for the slight gain of an incomplete subjugation of their neighbors. — τῶν ὑπαρχόντων: see on ὑπάρξει 12. 23.

9. τὴν χῶραν τεμνομένην: according to the advice of Pericles at the opening of the Peloponnesian War, to allow the Spartans to ravage Attica rather than risk defeat on land, where Athens was weak, and to consider the maintenance of her empire by sea so great an issue as to make the losses of orchards and houses trifling in comparison (Thuc. 2. 62). — οί κόνδυνος οὗτος: this risk: 'only by taking the risk of ignoring Sparta’s dictation, and keeping a united people, can we hope to maintain ourselves against the attempts of the exiled oligarchs.'

10. άλλα γάρ: force, see on 12. 40. — ἀλλοτρία: sc. γῆ. — ἐστήσαμεν: empirical aorist, see on ἴσθομαι 16. 20.—τὸ δίκαιον . . . ἔσεσθαι: justice will be with the victims of injustice. But the text is doubtful, see Crit. Note.

11. ὡστε οἱ μὲν πρόγονοι: that, while our fathers. On the Greek preference for coördination of antithetic clauses cp. on § 5 and on 12. 47. For the rhetorical ἐπαναστροφή and κύκλος in this section see App. § 57. 7, 8.
APPENDIX

I. CHRONOLOGICAL OUTLINE

[In this chronological outline the sole purpose is to furnish a table of reference for the events involved in the speeches of Lysias that are contained in this volume. Some events that are otherwise of little importance are included because necessary to an understanding of the speeches.

For the dating of the speeches, see Blass, p. 647. For Speeches I, IV, V, and XXIII not even approximate dates can be given. For the outline of events from 413 to 404 B.C. I have followed Busolt, III, ii, p. xxxi ff. For the period after 404, Meyer and Beloch. For 410-403 cp. Boerner, De Rebus a Graecis inde ab Anno 410 usque ad Annum 403 A. Chr. N. gestis Quaestiones Historicae, Göttingen, 1894. For 408-380 cp. Judeich, Kleinasiatische Studien, Marburg, 1892.]

I. Events before the Revolution of the Four Hundred.

413 B.C. September. Defeat of the Athenian expedition to Sicily.

Appointment of ten Προβοσκολοι by the Athenians as an extraordinary Committee of Safety, taking over a part of the work of the democratic Senate.

412 Rapid defection of Athenian allies. Sparta assured of active support of Syracuse and of Persia. Seat of war transferred to subject states of the Aegean.

Lysias and Polemarchus are banished from Thurii.

November–December. The Athenian Pisander heads a movement among trierarchs of the fleet to win the Persian support away from Sparta through intercession of Alcibiades. This service of Alcibiades is conditioned on a change in Athenian government by limiting the democracy.

December. Pisander is sent to Athens with a committee from the leaders of the fleet to propose the change in constitution.

411 January. The Ecclesia reluctantly approves the plan, and appoints Pisander and ten others to treat with Alcibiades and Tissaphernes.

Pisander perfects the organization of the oligarchical clubs in the city to prepare for the revolution.
Piander and the other commissioners return to the fleet. They fail in their negotiations with Alcibiades and Tissaphernes. Unable to retreat safely from the revolutionary movement, Pisander with five of the commissioners returns to Athens to complete the work.

May. The oligarchical clubs with Lysander finish their preparations.

June. The revolution is consummated by the establishment of the provisional government of the Four Hundred in place of the democratic Senate, the restriction of the franchise to a body of not less than five thousand property holders, and the adoption of temporary and permanent constitutions. The Four Hundred are for the time being in absolute control.

Lysias and Polemarchus return to Athens.

II. The Rule of the Four Hundred, June to September, 411 B.C.

The men of the fleet at Samos refuse to submit to the Four Hundred, organize themselves as the sovereign democracy, elect generals of their own, and call Alcibiades to the chief command.

The Four Hundred negotiate for peace with Sparta, and plan for the complete control of the harbor.

Growing opposition between the extreme oligarchs, led by Antiphon, and the moderate oligarchs, led by Aristocrates and Theramenes. The moderates demand that the five thousand citizens be designated. They hope for reconciliation with Alcibiades and the men of the fleet.

September. The approach of a Lacedaemonian fleet and the loss of Euboea bring the reaction to a head. The people, led by Theramenes, depose the Four Hundred and place the government in the hands of ‘all citizens who can furnish arms.’ This moderate restriction of the franchise is known to be acceptable to Alcibiades and the fleet.

III. The Rule of the Moderate Aristocracy, led by Theramenes, 411–410 B.C.

The new government carries out the reconciliation with Alcibiades and the fleet.

Some of the extreme oligarchs flee to the Spartan camp. Antiphon and two others are executed as traitors, Theramenes taking an active part in their prosecution.
Many less prominent oligarchs are punished with fine or otherwise.

The new administration is strengthened by a naval victory off Cynossema on the Hellespont (Sept.) and another at Abydus (Nov.).

410 Early Spring. Alcibiades wins the great victory of Cyzicus, capturing the whole Peloponnesian fleet. Regains control of the grain route.

May–June. Thrasyllus sails from Athens with reënforcements of ships and men for Alcibiades; he suffers a severe defeat in an attack on Ephesus.¹

The moderate restrictions of the compromise constitution are removed, and democracy is fully restored without violence (before the beginning of the new civil year, July 13).

IV. The Rule of the Radical Democracy after the First Restoration, 410–404 B.C.

Cleophon, the popular leader, provides for the masses by daily donations and by employment on public works.

The “sycophants” resume their trade, and vigorous attacks are made in the courts against the lesser supporters of the Four Hundred.

409 Beginning of friendly relations with Evagoras, tyrant of Salamis in Cyprus.

Winter (409/8). Alcibiades takes Byzantium.

408 June. Alcibiades returns to Athens. He is received with extraordinary honors, and is given practical control of the administration.

407 The Athenian defeat at Notium leads to the deposition of Alcibiades. Conon succeeds him in chief command.

406 June. Great efforts to equip a fleet to rescue Conon, blockaded in the harbor of Mytilene.

July–August. Athens wins a victory at Arginusae, but loses some four thousand men by the storm.

Autumn. Condemnation and execution of the generals of Arginusae.

¹ Grote and Beloch place the expedition of Thrasyllus in 409 and the return of Alcibiades in 407. Beloch places the battle of Notium in 406. For a summary of this much-disputed question, see Busolt, III. ii. 1529.
Peace proposals of the Spartans are rejected under influence of Cleophon.

405 September. Lysander seizes the Athenian fleet at Aegospotami. Conon takes refuge with Evagoras.

Late Autumn. Beginning of the siege of Athens.

Ambassadors sent to Agis to treat for peace. Then, by his direction, sent to Lacedaemonia. Their proposals refused, and other conditions laid down.

404 January. Theramenes sent to Lysander to learn the real purpose of Sparta. He uses the opportunity to mature plans for Lysander's help in overthrowing the democracy and restoring the banished oligarchs. He stays with Lysander three months.

The aristocrats come into control, and secure the death of Cleophon.

April. Theramenes, at the head of an embassy of ten, is sent to Sparta with full powers to negotiate peace.

Lysander takes possession of Athens, and begins the demolition of the walls (about April 25).

Lysander besieges Samos.

The two aristocratic factions, led respectively by Critias and Theramenes, together mature plans for the overthrow of the democracy.

Early Summer (?). The oligarchy of the Thirty is set up by the help of Lysander.¹

V. The Rule of the Thirty and their Successors, 404–403 B.C.

1. Administration of the Thirty.

The Thirty receive a Spartan garrison under Callibius.²

Execution of prominent democratic leaders.

Death of Polemarchus and flight of Lysias.

Three thousand admitted to nominal political rights. All others are disarmed.

Growing disagreement between the extreme and moderate factions of the Thirty. Theramenes is put to death by influence of Critias.

All men outside the three thousand are forced to leave the city.

¹ For the month, see Meyer, V. 19 Anm. So Beloch, II. 109 Anm.; Boerner (p. 71), Sept.; Judeich (p. 28 Anm.), late summer.

² On the order of events, see Meyer, V. 23 Anm.
Early Winter. Thrasybulus with about seventy exiles seizes Phyle.

The Thirty provide a place of ultimate refuge for themselves by seizing Eleusis. They put to death three hundred citizens of Eleusis and Salamis.

Early Spring. Thrasybulus with his force, now increased to one thousand, moves down to Munychia. He repels the attack of the Thirty. Critias is killed in battle.

The three thousand depose the Thirty, nearly all of whom retire to Eleusis. A Board of Ten succeeds them.

2. Administration of the Ten.

The Ten prosecute the war against the exiled democrats, instead of seeking reconciliation. They coöperate with the Thirty at Eleusis in securing help from Sparta. Sparta grants a loan of 100 t., with which Lysander raises a mercenary force at Eleusis. A Spartan fleet blockades the Piraeus.

Pausanias follows with Spartan troops, and effects a reconciliation between the oligarchs and the exiles.¹

October 4. Formal entry of the democratic exiles into the city.

Lysias returns with the exiles.

VI. The Rule of the Democracy after the Second Restoration, 403–.

1. Temporary Administration by a Commission of Twenty.

2. Administration by the Regular Officers of the Democracy.

402 (?) Lysias, Speech XXIV, For the Cripple (some time after 403).

Lysias, Speech XXXII, Against Diogiton, and XXI, Defense on Charge of Bribery (402/1).

Expedition of Cyrus.

The exiled oligarchs at Eleusis surrender.

Failure of Thrasybulus's proposal to extend the franchise to all who helped in the Return. Lysias thus fails to secure Athenian citizenship. (See p. 317.)

Conon comes to Athens with his fleet, and helps complete the walls. Great honors to Conon and his patron, Evagoras.

Conon tries through Aristophanes and Eunomus to turn Dionysius from support of Sparta by proposing a marriage connection with Evagoras.

Sparta tries through Antalcidas to turn Persia from the support of Athens.

Conon arrested at Sardis by the Persian satrap. Escapes to Cyprus, where he dies not long after.
Lysias, Speech III, Against Simon (c. 392).

Evagoras appeals to Athens for help against Persia. Aristophanes is sent to complete negotiations. Philocrates sails for Cyprus with ten ships; fleet is captured by the Spartans.

Thrasybulus regains control of Thracian coast and the Hellespont, and of many coast and island cities.
Lysias, Speech XXVII, Against Epicrates (c. 389).

Popular feeling turns against Thrasybulus and his colleagues. Suspicion that they are enriching themselves. Recall is ordered, but Thrasybulus dies before it can be executed.¹

Spartan Antalcidas wins active support of Dionysius, and goes to Persia to negotiate for withdrawal of Persian support from Athens.

Ill success of Athenian fleets on the Hellespont and on the home coast.
High price of grain at Athens because of uncertainty of control of Hellespont.
Second expedition to help Evagoras; Chabrias in command.

II. Athenian Legal Procedure

[The following account is in general based on Lipsius's revision of Meier and Schöemann, Der Attische Process, and his revision of Schöemann, Griechische Alterthümer. The conditions described are those of the early part of the fourth century B.C., the time of Lysias's professional activity.]

Constitution of the Courts

1. Athenian legal practice divided cases into three classes: (1) cases of homicide, (2) public cases other than those of homicide, (3) private cases. The separation of homicide from other cases was a survival of the ancient view of bloodshed as primarily a sin against the gods, to be atoned for both by criminal penalties and ceremonial cleansing.

2. The ancient court of Areopagus, composed of the ex-archons, sitting under the presidency of the Ἀρχή βασιλείας, the religious head of the state, had sole jurisdiction in cases of premeditated homicide. The other forms of homicide were tried by the Ephetae, a special court of fifty-one members selected by lot from the noblest families, sitting under the same presidency.

3. Public cases (δίκαι δημόσιαι), other than those of homicide, included all cases in which the issue directly concerned the state, either alone or in common with an individual. Here belonged prosecutions for such offenses against the state as treason, bribery, desertion, impiety, and suits involving claims to public property; here, too, fell the numerous suits to test the legality of acts of the Ecclesia (γραφαὶ παρανόμων), the examination before a jury required of every public officer before taking up his office (δοκυμασία), and his examination at the close of his term of office (εὐθυναί). Public cases were tried before the heliastic courts.

4. Private cases were those in which the issue directly concerned individuals only, the state having no other interest than the preservation of the general order and the protection of individual rights. Here belonged suits concerning contracts and property; all cases concerning wills and inheritances, prosecution for damage in case of assault or slander, and for restitution in case of theft or fraud. Private cases came before the same courts as public cases, but the preliminary steps were different.

1 Arson also fell under their jurisdiction.
2 See §§ 27–29.
5. The presidency of the various courts involved the reception of the complaints and documents necessary to the institution of a suit, the conduct of preliminary hearings, the presidency over the court at the time of the jury trial, and provision for the execution of the penalty in case of conviction. This presidency was assigned upon the principle that every official of the state should hold the presidency of the court in any case arising within the domain of his own office. Thus a case involving the claims of the state against a trierarch would be tried under the presidency of the Naval Board; cases arising from family relations were tried under the presidency of the First Archon; the Αἱρέτικον πολεμικός presided in cases concerning foreigners; the six lower archons, the Θεσμοθέται, presided in a large body of cases which did not fall within the field of other magistrates or boards.

6. All cases except those of homicide were tried before large juries, made up from a body of citizens drawn by lot from voluntary candidates for jury service for the year. The total number of these annual jurymen was, in theory, 6000, enough to provide ten sections of 500 men each, and to leave 1000 men to fill vacancies. But with the loss of population caused by the Peloponnesian War it became impossible to keep the number full. Under these conditions any citizen who chose to offer his name was sure of a place; he might even be enrolled as a regular member of one section and a substitute member of one or more sections besides, thus helping to fill out the scant number of jurymen, and earning his juror’s wages on days when his service was not required in his own section.

7. Any citizen over thirty years of age, who was possessed of full civic rights, was eligible for jury service. The jurymen all took a solemn oath at the beginning of their year of office, and were then liable to be called on at any time for service in court. In the time of Lysias there was not such a pressure of legal business as in the Periclean period, when the Athenian courts were crowded with cases from the league cities, but a juror was probably in actual service more than half of the time. He might serve on year after year, and thus the service might become the regular employment of men who were quite content with small pay for light work, and of old men whose days of physical labor were over. From the time of Pericles the pay of the jurymen was an obol for each day of actual service, until Cléon raised it to three obols, about the wages of an unskilled laborer.

8. The whole body of jurymen was divided into ten sections, and on the morning of each court day the Thesmothetae drew lots to determine what sections, or parts of sections, should sit for that day in the court rooms in different parts of the city. The number of men assigned to any case was determined by the nature of the case. A less important private suit had the smallest jury, 200 men; other private suits required 400; the ordinary number for public suits was 500, but in more important cases two or more sections were united, so that we read of juries of 1000, 1500, 2000, 2500,\(^1\) and even of a case where the whole panel of 6000 sat as one jury.\(^2\)

Procedure in Public Suits

9. The institution of a private suit depended, of course, upon the initiative of one of the parties directly concerned. In public cases suit might be instituted in two ways. First, it was the duty of any public officer who became cognizant of a violation of law in the department under his control to prosecute the offender.\(^3\) Secondly, any private citizen holding full civil rights was equally at liberty to bring any public case before the courts and to prosecute it to the end. To guard against malicious or hasty prosecution, however, it was provided that one who brought such a suit and then presented so weak a case that he failed to receive one fifth of the votes of the jury, must pay a fine of 1000 dr., and was thereafter disqualified from bringing a similar suit (partial \(\delta\alpha\tau\iota\mu\iota\alpha\).\(^4\))

10. As the first step in the introduction of a public suit, the plaintiff had to summon the defendant to appear at a stated time before the magistrate under whose jurisdiction the trial would fall. This summons was served in person and before witnesses (\(\kappa\lambda\eta\tau\iota\pi\rho\epsilon\sigma\ς\)).\(^5\)

\(^1\) To the round numbers given one man was added in each case to avoid a tie, making juries of 201, 501, etc.
\(^2\) Andoc. 1. 17.
\(^3\) When a notorious crime had been committed, the Ecclesia sometimes appointed a special commission to investigate the case and prosecute the offender in the courts. There were no standing prosecuting attorneys as in our system.
\(^4\) In many private suits the plaintiff who did not win one fifth of the votes had to pay to the defendant one sixth of the sum for which he sued (\(\epsilon\pi\omega\beta\epsilon\lambda\alpha\), i.e. one obol in every drachma).
\(^5\) It was not customary to arrest the accused and confine him while awaiting trial, except in a special class of crimes, prosecuted by special and more summary procedures, called \(\alpha\tau\alpha\gamma\omega\gamma\eta\gamma\), \(\epsilon\phi\chi\gamma\gamma\eta\sigma\iota\), and \(\epsilon\nu\delta\epsilon\xi\iota\iota\); even then the defendant was released if he could furnish sufficient security for his appearance in court.
11. The second step was the appearance of the two parties before the magistrate on the day designated in the summons. If the magistrate accepted the case as falling within his jurisdiction, he received from the plaintiff a written statement of the charge, and from the defendant his written denial, and then appointed a day for a preliminary hearing of the case. He then published the accusation by posting it in a public place.

12. The third step was the preliminary hearing (ἀνάκρισις) before the same magistrate. The defendant might now take exception to the jurisdiction of the magistrate or to the technical form of the accusation, and in some cases this exception had to be tried as a separate case in court before the original case could proceed. If the defendant accepted the jurisdiction of the magistrate and the form of the charge, each party was required to take oath, the plaintiff to the truth of his accusation, the defendant to the truth of his denial. Each was also required to produce all the evidence which he wished to use at the coming jury trial. This evidence might include copies of the laws involved, documents of all kinds, such as contracts, wills, letters, and the testimony of witnesses. This testimony might consist of attested affidavits of witnesses necessarily absent, or of the statements of witnesses present at the hearing; but in the latter case the testimony was usually written down before the hearing, so that at the time of the hearing the witnesses had only to assent to the record of their testimony as correct. Usually each party administered an oath to the witnesses of the other party.

13. Many cases involved the testimony of slaves. This evidence was held valid only when given under torture, on the supposition that the desire for release from the torture on the one side would counterbalance the natural desire of the slave to testify according to his master's orders on the other. A party to a suit either challenged his opponent to submit his slaves or offered his own slaves. This testimony was taken in the presence of witnesses, usually previous to the ἀνάκρισις, and presented to the magistrate in writing with the other documents. The torture was conducted by the litigants themselves or by men agreed upon by them, or in some cases by public slaves. The point to which the torture should be carried was previously agreed upon by the litigants.

14. At the conclusion of the ἀνάκρισις the magistrate sealed up all documents, including all the testimony, in two urns, one for each side, and kept them in his custody until the trial. No other testimony could be presented at the coming trial.¹

15. The fourth step in the case was the trial before a jury, under the presidency of the magistrate before whom the preliminary hearing had been held. On the morning of the appointed day the Thesmophorae, meeting at the central court house, assigned by lot to this magistrate a court house, and a section of jurymen sufficient for the hearing of the appointed case.

16. The court room had wooden seats for the jurors, provision for listeners outside the railing which shut in the jurors' seats, and four platforms. The presiding magistrate occupied one platform, a second served as speaker's platform, while plaintiff and defendant had each a platform for his own seat and those of his immediate friends.

17. Proceedings opened with libation and prayer by the herald of the court. The clerk then read the charge as sworn to by the plaintiff at the ἀνάκρισις, and the corresponding answer of the defendant. The plaintiff then took the speaker's platform and proceeded to argue his case. The law required every man to deliver his plea in person. If he had not the ability to compose a speech for himself, he could employ a professional speech writer (λογογράφος) to write it for him; he then committed the speech to memory and delivered it as his own. By the time of Lysias's professional activity such employment of a λογογράφος had become the common custom. Further, if no objection was raised by the jurors, the speaker might, at the conclusion of his own speech, call upon one or more of his friends to address the jury in his behalf. These συνηγοροῦ might present aspects of the case not taken up by the first speaker, and might be men of greater ability as speakers; but they made it clear to the jury that they were impelled entirely by personal friendship to the one party, or personal hostility to the other; a speech by a hired advocate was not tolerated. But very often these speeches of the συνηγοροῦ were also written by professional speech writers and delivered from memory.

18. At the conclusion of the speech or speeches for the prosecution the defendant followed under the same conditions. No opportunity for speeches in rebuttal was given except in the case of certain private suits.

¹A rare exception was where at the trial one party challenged the other, in the presence of the jury, to present some piece of evidence, and the challenge was accepted.
19. The whole trial was concluded in one day, and in certain classes of important cases a fixed time, measured by the clepsydra, was at the beginning of the trial assigned to each side.

20. As a plea proceeded, the speaker called upon the clerk of the court from time to time to read the documents filed at the ἀνάκρωσις. When testimony was read, the witness mounted the speaker's βῆμα and assented to the testimony as correct,—in some cases he read it aloud himself,—but he was not allowed to give new testimony, nor might he be cross-questioned. Each litigant might, however, call his opponent to the platform and cross-question him in the presence of the jury, and the law required him to answer. In the hands of a trained speaker this became a powerful weapon.

21. It was customary for the defendant to make an earnest appeal, in the last part of his speech, to the emotions of the jurors, by reciting the sufferings that threatened him, and by presenting in court dependent relatives,—wife, children, aged parents,—who would suffer with him. Another form of supplication was the appeal to the presence in court of prominent and popular public men, as indorsing the speaker's plea.

22. At the close of the speeches there was no exposition of the law by the presiding magistrate, nor was there any opportunity for the jurymen to consult one with another, but the herald of the court called upon them to come forward to the platform immediately and deposit their votes.

23. On the platform stood two urns, one of bronze, the other of wood. Each juryman received two small bronze disks (ψηφοι), one pierced by a solid axis, the other by a hollow one. The disk with solid axis was a vote for the defendant, the other for the plaintiff. As each juryman passed before the two urns, he threw into the bronze urn the disk which represented his vote, and threw the discarded vote into the wooden urn. As one held the disks with the ends of the axis between thumb and finger, it was impossible for even the nearest bystander to see which vote he put into the bronze urn; the secrecy of the vote was thus fully protected. The voting finished, the bronze urn was emptied upon a stone table, the solid and perforated votes sorted and counted, and the result announced by the presiding magistrate, and recorded by the clerk.

24. In many cases the penalty to follow conviction was prescribed by law (ἀγώνες ἀτύχητοι); but in other cases (ἀγώνες τύχητοι), if the jury voted for conviction, they then listened to a further argument from the prosecution, proposing a certain penalty, and then to one from the defense, proposing a milder one. They then had to vote again to determine which of the two penalties proposed should be inflicted.

25. From a verdict once rendered by a heliastic court there was no appeal; there was no provision for arguing “exceptions” taken during the trial, and usually no possibility of securing a second trial.1

26. The penalty was immediately executed: if death, by the Eleven (the chief constables); if loss of property, by the civil officers of the deme or by the Eleven; if a fine, by the collectors of the treasury to which the fine would be paid. Imprisonment was not used as a penalty, but only as a means for securing the presence of a criminal in court in certain cases (see § 10, n. 5), or as temporary confinement until the payment of a fine, or until the execution of a man condemned to death.

PROCEDURE IN PRIVATE SUITS

27. The early stages of a private suit differed in important particulars from those just described as belonging to public suits. Private suits as a whole fell under the jurisdiction of a board of forty justices, selected by lot and serving in groups of four, one group for each tribe.2

28. The first step in a private suit was, like that in a public suit, the formal summons of the defendant; but the second step carried the case, not to a civil magistrate, but to the group of four justices who represented the tribe of the defendant. In petty cases, involving not

1 A defeated litigant might, however, bring suit on the ground that false testimony had been given against him.

2 Several large classes of private cases, in which it was necessary to expedite proceedings, were grouped as “month cases” (δίκαι εὐμνηροί), under the jurisdiction of a separate board of five εἰσαγωγεῖς, who carried them through the jury courts to a decision within a period of one month. In cases involving not more than ten drachmas the εἰσαγωγεῖς themselves gave final decision, without a jury trial. These cases were for the most part concerned with business and banking.
more than ten drachmas, the decision of the four justices was final. If the sum was greater, they turned the case over to a public arbitrator (ἄντρητος).

29. The justices selected this arbitrator by lot from a large board of public arbitrators, who were liable to service for the year. This board consisted of all citizens who were in their sixtieth year, and who had thus just completed the forty-one years in which a citizen was liable to military service.1 To one of these elderly men the four justices turned over the private case, and after one or more formal hearings, at which testimony for both sides was produced, he gave his decision. If both parties accepted this decision, the case was ended. But either party had the right of appeal to a jury court. In case of such appeal the arbitrator sealed up all documents, including copies of all the evidence, in two urns, and handed them over to the board of four justices from whom he had received the case.2 This board now resumed charge of the case, received from the Thesmothetae a jury for its hearing, and presided at the trial, taking in every respect the place held by the magistrate in a public suit.

30. In comparing the Athenian legal system with our own, we are first of all impressed with the absence of a trained judiciary, standing between the executive officers and the citizen. The men who conducted all hearings and presided at all jury trials were ordinary citizens, selected usually by lot, and having no professional knowledge of the law. Their short term of office precluded the practical knowledge that might have come by experience. The control exercised by our judges — men of thorough legal learning and years of experience in the courts, and holding their office for a long term — was entirely unknown to the

1 The names of these men for any year were readily obtainable from the citizen rolls. The young men who reached their majority in any year were enrolled as one group, forming a standing group for military purposes. The men of such a group all completed their last year of liability to military service together, and together passed on as the board of public arbitrators for the ensuing year. The total number, as well as the proportion from any one tribe, would, of course, vary from year to year. For the year 325/4 B.C. we have a list of one hundred and three names of arbitrators, "crowned" by the people. See Sandys on Aristotle, Resp. Ath. 53. 4.

2 The hearing before the arbitrator in a private suit thus became in case of appeal what the ἄντρητος was in a public suit.
Athenian system. There was no impartial presiding judge to expound the law and to explain to the jury the bearing of facts on technical points. The jury were at the mercy of the shrewd pleas of the speech writers.

31. Nor was there, as in our system, the possibility of appeal in the larger cases from the verdict of the jury court to the decision of a body of expert and impartial judges. At no stage could the honest litigant depend upon the protection given by legal knowledge.

32. Nor was the composition of the jury itself such as to inspire great respect for its decisions. Its large size did guard against the danger of individual bribery, but it gave to the body the faults and dangers inherent in any large assembly. This was especially true in public cases, where not less than five hundred men sat as one jury. In such a body the feeling of individual responsibility is weakened, and the contagious emotions of the crowd have full sway. But this was not the worst. The Athenian jury was far from being representative of the best intelligence and character of the city. Service was voluntary, and the pay was that of ordinary unskilled labor. The inevitable result was that the annual jury panel was filled up with men to whom the day offered no more rewarding occupation — the small politicians, the idle, the poor and enfeebled old men. The sturdy farmers from the country could not afford to take up such service, still less the successful men of the city demes. And there was no possibility of bettering this in any individual case. The more critical the suit, the larger the crowd that was called in to decide it. In our own system a great constitutional case comes before a board of expert justices, qualified by the ripest legal experience and the highest character. In Athens such a case would have been judged by increasing an incompetent jury of five hundred by a thousand or two thousand men of no greater wisdom or experience. To appreciate conditions in Athens we have only to imagine all the legal business of Boston or Chicago settled by jury courts made up by lot from native-born citizens, offering themselves for service at a dollar and a half a day, and presided over by men from the various executive boards of the city.

33. The lack of judicial control and the low type of jury service had its inevitable effect on the style of pleading followed by the λογογράφου. It was useless to attempt any argument that involved long and close reasoning, or minute and careful attention to legal provisions. The argument that served best with such a court was the one that most flattered their self-esteem, most shrewdly appealed to their prejudices, and most vigorously stirred their sympathies and passions. The profession of law was, in the time of Lysias, gradually developing out of that of the rhetorician; even in the next generation rhetorical skill formed a larger part of the equipment of the legal speech writer than knowledge of the law. Some men there were who were learned in the law, but the mass of the λογογράφοι were rather rhetoricians than lawyers.

34. Such a system of courts furnished a rich field for the "sycophants." When one of these professional haranguers, trained in the plausible rhetorical art, popular with the masses, and skilled in moving their emotions, threatened a quiet, law-abiding, wealthy citizen with a lawsuit, the citizen might well think twice before deciding to trust to the protection of the courts; to buy off the prosecutor was the simpler and safer way.

35. We must remember also that the Athenian jury courts had the widest possible jurisdiction. Through a γραφὴ παρανόμων the validity of every resolution of Senate and Ecclesia might be submitted to a jury. Every official had to pass his approval (δοκιμασία) in a jury court before entering upon office, and his record as an official was reviewed by another jury at the close of the year (εὐθυναί). The jury system was rightly looked upon as the very heart of the democratic constitution. Here the sovereign people exercised their real power, and here they displayed their real weakness.

36. The Athenian legal system shows endless ingenuity in all the petty details,—the complicated allotment of jurors to their sections and court rooms, the orderly and secret ballots, the distribution of cases among magistrates,—but its fundamental principle, that voluntary, underpaid, and unskilled courts could safely be intrusted with the greatest public and private interests, was a mistake. It is not strange that from such an Athenian system the Roman and the modern world, while inheriting magnificent specimens of legal rhetoric, received no speeches which are of permanent value as legal arguments, and no commanding legal precedents.
III. RHETORICAL TERMS

A. THE THREE TYPES OF PROSE COMPOSITION

37. I. ὁ ἀδρός χαρακτήρ, genus grande atque robustum, the Grand Style. Thucydides.

II. ὁ ἵσχυς χαρακτήρ, genus subtile, the Plain Style. Lysias.

III. ὁ μέσος χαρακτήρ, genus medium, the Intermediate Style (Mixed Style). Thrasymachus, Isocrates, Plato.

The Greek rhetoricians, beginning probably with Antisthenes, a contemporary of Lysias, distinguished three great types, χαρακτήρες, of prose composition.

38. They found in Thucydides the perfection of the grand style. Dionysius thus sums up his characteristics: "In fine, there are four 'instruments,' so to say, of the style of Thucydides — the artificial character of the vocabulary, the variety of the constructions, the roughness of the harmony, the speed of the narrative. Its 'colours' are solidity, pungency, condensation, austerity, gravity, terrible vehemence, and, above all, his power of stirring the emotions."

39. Lysias was the representative of the plain style. Its basis was the adaptation of the language of daily life to literary effects. The master of this style depends upon common words, avoiding archaic and poetic diction; he refrains from the formation of new compounds

1 Volkmann (Rhetorik der Griechen und Römer, 532 ff.) traces the development of the theories and classification of "Styles" in the Greek and Roman schools. He shows that the division into three styles was the original one, and that other divisions were modifications of it.

2 Dionysius uses χαρακτήρ as his precise technical term; but in discussing each χαρακτήρ, style, he often uses for it the more general term λέξις, language. Jebb's note, Attic Orators, I. 21, which says that the three λέξεις distinguished in Dionysius's essay on Demosthenes, cc. 1-3, refer "to the choice of words" is not justified. In those chapters λέξεις is used for the more precise χαρακτήρες; that it is not limited to the "choice of words" appears in the subsequent chapters; e.g. of the λέξεις of Isocrates it is said (Demosthenes, c. 4) that it borrows Gorgias's antitheses and pairs of equal cola, gives excessive attention to rhythm and the avoidance of hiatus, and strives at unbroken periodic flow. All of these things are beyond the mere choice of words. For the relation of the three ἄρμονια of Jebb's note to the χαρακτήρες, see Volkmann, 545-7.

3 Dionysius, Second Letter to Ammaeus, 793, Roberts's translation. and from the use of metaphor and simile; he perfects a simple and yet strong and rounded sentence structure, and his language flows on smoothly and rapidly, without appearance of effort for rhythmical effect.

40. Isocrates was the representative of the third style, the intermediate type. His style showed a union of the best qualities of the other two. He has the purity and precision of diction of the plain style, and for the most part he avoids metaphorical language. But with the simplicity and persuasiveness of the plain style he combines the dignity and grandeur and eloquence of the grand style.

41. So long as Thucydides, Lysias, and Isocrates were the greatest of prose writers these three “styles” served the purpose of classification; but when the critics were confronted with the problem of defining and classifying the oratory of Demosthenes, they saw the inadequacy of the old formulae. Demosthenes could be classed neither with Thucydides nor Lysias nor Isocrates. If he were placed with Isocrates as a representative of the intermediate style, the term would become so inclusive as to break down by its vagueness, and he could certainly be placed with neither of the extremes. The critics solved this problem of classification in two ways: some, like Demetrius, added a fourth style, χαρακτηρ δεινός, the powerful style. This new “style” was a recognition of the fact that the real characteristic of Demosthenes’s oratory was not any mingling of grand and simple language, but a great power which moved men. Other critics, like Dionysius, made no attempt to remodel the old system of classification, or to find a place for Demosthenes within it. They preferred rather to treat the style of Demosthenes as something outside and above the three older types; a style which gathered up into itself the virtues of all, and so was superior to all, a δεινότης, power, of which the three χαρακτηρεσ became the instruments.

B. Running Style and Periodic Style

42. I. ἡ εἰρωμένη λέξις.
II. ἡ καταστραμμένη λέξις = ἡ ἐν περιόδοις.
Thrasymachus, a contemporary of Lysias, was the first to teach

1 Dionysius, Demosthenes, c. 4.
2 Περὶ ἐρωμεῖας, §§ 36, 240 ff.
3 Dionysius’s whole essay on Demosthenes is founded on this idea. For the whole discussion as outlined above, see Volkmann, 537 ff.
4 See Introd. p. 16 ff.
the distinction between the loose, running form of speech, and the compact, periodic form, and he first developed the periodic form as a distinct artistic type. None of the definitions of Thrasymachus have come down to us, but Aristotle in the next generation gives in his Rhetoric (3. 9) a discussion of the periodic style, which probably represents the developed theory of Thrasymachus, and which has remained the fundamental exposition of periodic theory for both ancient and modern times. Aristotle calls the running style η ἐρυμένη λέξις, the string style. The separate thoughts are strung along one after another like beads; the first gives no suggestion that the second is coming, nor the second that a third is to follow; the series may stop at any point, or it may go on indefinitely.

43. Good examples of the running style, λέξις εἰρυμένη, are the following:

12. 9 ὁ δ' ἔφασκεν

   εἰ πολλὰ εἴη.

   εἴπον οὖν ὅτι τάλαντον ἄργυριον ἔτομος εἴην δοῦναι:

   ὁ δ' ὀμολόγησε ταῦτα ποιήσειν.

He said yes,

if it was a large sum.

I said therefore that I was ready to give a talent of silver. And he agreed to do it.

12. 14 ὁ δ' ὑπέσχετο ταῦτα ποιήσειν.

   ἔδοκε δ' αὐτῷ βέλτιον εἶναι πρὸς Θεόγινν μνησθήναι:

   ἡγεῖτο γὰρ ἀπαν ποιήσειν αὐτὸν

   εἰ τις ἄργυριον διδοῖ.

1 Writers before Thrasymachus had used periodic structure freely, but Thrasymachus was the first to make it a matter of conscious study. Here, as in almost all matters of rhetoric, we must distinguish between the forms which the practical speakers instinctively shaped for themselves, and the names and theories which the rhetoricians afterward applied to them. The testimony as to Thrasymachus is that of Suidas, s.v. Θρασύμαχος, and of Theophrastus, cited by Dionysius, Lysias, c. 6.

2 The rhetorical treatise Περὶ Ἐρυμένειας, which bears the name of Demetrius, but is of unknown authorship, presents the Aristotelian theory as still further developed by the later rhetoricians. Roberts’s edition (Demetrius on Style, Cambridge, 1902), with its admirable translation, commentary, and glossary of technical terms, makes this treatise available as the best starting point for the study of the theory of Greek prose style.
And he promised to do this.
But it seemed to him to be better to speak to Theognis, for he thought he would do anything,
if one should give him money.

In these passages we have a complete thought at the end of each clause, and nothing suggests that another clause is to follow, nor when we reach the end of the passage is there anything to give the feeling that the separate thoughts have now rounded out one larger, comprehensive idea. It is to be noted that the running style is not made up simply of a succession of "and" clauses; the second passage above shows how subordinate clauses, like those of cause or condition, may fit into the running style by being placed after the principal clause of the sentence.

44. In the periodic style, λέξεις κατεστραμμένη, the separate thoughts are so drawn together and compacted that they form parts of larger expressions, each group gathering the separate parts into a rounded, definite whole. As we hear the first thought, we anticipate another to correspond to it, or to complete its meaning; we cannot dismiss the first until the second and all that follow have been taken up with it; and when we hear the last, we have the feeling that the whole thought is now rounded out and complete. Such an expression the rhetoricians call a period, and its constituent parts — often, but not always, identical with the clauses of a sentence — they call cola.

45. Typical periods are the following:

12. ἂποκτηνόνων μὲν γὰρ ἀνθρώπους περὶ οὐδενὸς ἡγούντο λαμβάνειν δὲ χρήματα περὶ τολλοῦ ἐποιοῦντο.

To kill men they regarded as naught,
but to get money they held as of great importance.

The μὲν in the first colon (with the emphatic ἂποκτηνόνων) leads us to expect a colon to balance it;¹ we foresee the antithesis, and only when we have heard the corresponding member do we feel that the thought is rounded out. The first colon is like one arc of a circle, which implies one or more other arcs; or, to use the simile that underlies the Greek names, the first member is like the section of the race course out to the turning post; this section implies and demands the corresponding section (κῶλον), from the post back to the starting point, to complete the full circuit (περὶ-όδος).\footnote{Cp. Demetrius, c. II.}

Antithesis of cola is the foundation of a large proportion of the more studied periods in Lysias. The earliest writers, especially Antiphon, had reveled in antitheses; the other school, the Gorgian, unlike them in many respects, had carried antithetic structure even further. Lysias, even in his plainest style, followed the custom of his time, and made frequent use of antithetic periods. His more elevated passages are full of them.

46. But a second type of period rests upon mere parallelism of cola. When successive cola are parallel both in form and thought, we feel, as the series proceeds, that each is part of a larger unity, and so receive, at least in some degree, the effect of a period. Such a period is less perfect, for often we do not at the end of each colon feel that the thought is incomplete and so demand another colon to round it out; but the group as a whole does give the impression of periodic unity. Such a period we have in 12. 21:

τολλοῖς μὲν τῶν πολιτῶν εἰς τοὺς πολεμίους ἐξῆλθαν τολλοῖς δὲ ἀδύκως ἀποκτείναντες ἀτάφους ἐποίησαν πολλοῖς δὲ ἐπιτίμων ὄντας ἀτίμους κατέστησαν πολλῶν δὲ θυγατέρας μελλούσας ἐκδίδουσιν ἐκώλυσαν.

For they drove many of the citizens into hostile lands, and many they unjustly killed and robbed of funeral rites, and many who had been citizens they deprived of citizenship, and the daughters of many they prevented as they were on the point of marriage.

In the English we lose much of the periodic effect in losing the similarity of sound at the beginning and end of the cola, which in the Greek added to the unity produced by the parallelism of thought and construction, and by the uniform length of the cola.

47. A third basis of periodic structure is the impression of unity produced by expressing the subordinate thoughts first, in subordinate construction, and holding back the main thought till the last. The mind is thus held intent; the subordinate thought cannot be dismissed till one hears the main thought which puts it in its right relation.
When the main thought does come, it gives an impression of completion and a feeling of satisfaction; the circle is complete, the runner has rounded his course and is back at the goal.\textsuperscript{1} For this principle we may conveniently use the term \textit{sensus suspensio}.\textsuperscript{2}

\textbf{48.} We have an example of \textit{sensus suspensio} in the following period (25. 18):

\begin{quote}
\textit{ei δὲ οἶσθε χρῆναι οὕς ἐκεῖνοι παρέλλητον ἀδικοῦντες ὑμεῖς ἀπολέσαι
οἴδεις τῶν πολιτῶν ὑπολειφθήσεται.}
\end{quote}

\textit{But if you think it right that those whom they forebore to wrong be destroyed at your hands no citizen will be left.}

The first three cola prepare the way for the fourth, and have value only as they contribute to its force.

\textbf{49.} This form of sentence structure is, of course, common in all writers. Wherever the protasis stands first, or subordinate acts are expressed by participles before the main verb, or by preliminary subordinate constructions of any form, we have \textit{sensus suspensio}.

\textbf{50.} But often such expressions are periodic in form only. The real test of periodic structure in this type lies in the degree to which the preliminary cola contribute to the effect of the final one, and so \textsuperscript{1} Herbert Spencer, in his essay on the \textit{Philosophy of Style}, gives a discriminating discussion of the relation of such structure to lucidity. But lucidity is only one of several aims in periodic structure.

\textsuperscript{2} Aristotle holds that there are periods composed of a single colon (\textit{Rhetoric,} 3. 9. 5). Such a period he calls \textit{ἀφελής}. He probably had in mind the case of a single colon of considerable length, based on \textit{sensus suspensio} of words. Aristotle does not recognize the type of period that is based on \textit{sensus suspensio} of cola, for he divides all periods of more than one colon into \textit{λέξις διηρημένη} and \textit{λέξις ἀντικειμένη}, that is, periods based on parallelism and those based on antithesis. We do not know whether any rhetorician in the time of Lysias had recognized the fact of \textit{sensus suspensio} as a basis of periodic structure. In the matured rhetoric of Demetrius it is fully recognized (\textit{Πεπὶ ἐρωτεύεις,} c. 10). In antithetic structure the basis of periodic effect is really a \textit{sensus suspensio}, but it is convenient to distinguish it from that which comes from placing subordinate cola before principal ones.
unite with it in one larger thought. A sentence like the following has periodic form, but is not in the full sense a period:

12. 97 ὁσοὶ δὲ τὸν θάνατον διέφυγον πολλαχοῦ κινδυνεύσαντες καὶ εἰς πολλὰς πόλεις πλανηθέντες καὶ πανταχόθεν ἐκκηρυττόμενοι ἐνδεὶς ὄντες τῶν ἐπιτηδείων οἱ μὲν ἐν πολεμίᾳ τῇ πατριδὶ τοὺς παιδὰς καταλιπόντες οἱ δὲ ἐν ξένη γῇ πολλῶν ἐναντιομένων ἥρθετε εἰς τὸν Πειραιᾶ.

    And so many of you as escaped death after manifold dangers and after wanderings to many cities and rejection from all in want of food
    some leaving your children in your own land turned hostile others in a foreign land against the opposition of many came to the Piræus.

So far as the effect of the final colon is concerned, the long sentence might equally well have been broken up into several short sentences. Moreover, the final colon is not strong or emphatic enough to carry the weight of the long-suspended thought.

51. Yet even this purely formal type of period has value, particularly in narrative. Instead of stringing along one detail after another, it gathers them into groups, giving compactness and rounded form. Admirable periods of this type are found in XVI. 13–16.

52. The length of a period was closely limited by the Greek rhetoricians. Aristotle did not recognize a period as of more than two cola.1 Demetrius limited the cola to four.2 The Roman theorists enlarged the number. Quintilian says (9. 4. 125) : Habet periodus membra minimum duo. Medius numerus videntur quattuor, sed recipit frequenter et plura. The Greek orators seem not to have troubled themselves with any of these limitations as to number of cola in a period. They wrote as freely as do modern authors, and produced large, strong

units by the combination of many cola. Neither they nor their critics would have named these 'periods,' but such sentences have the unity of thought and the rounded form that are the essentials of periodic structure. Modern students of their works may wisely ignore the arbitrary limitation of number of cola, and treat these larger combinations as true periods.¹

53. Modern rhetoricians assume that a 'period' will make a complete sentence. No such idea prevailed with the Greeks; they saw a period wherever there was unity of thought and form in a group of cola; the group might be a pair of cola in the midst of a long sentence; again, a sentence might contain several periods together with non-periodic clauses, or be made up of a group of periods.

54. The following examples show how the true period may lie within the longer sentence:

12. 7 ἐδοξεῖν οὖν αὐτῶς δέκα συλλαβεῖν τούτων δὲ δύο πένητας ἵνα αὐτῶς ἡ πρὸς τοὺς ἄλλους ἀπολογία ὡς ὅποι αὐτόματον ἐνεκα ταῦτα πέτρακται ἄλλα συμφέροντα τῇ πολιτείᾳ γεγένηται ὥστε τι τῶν ἄλλων εὐλόγως πεποιηκότες.

The sentence as a whole is of the running type, but a clear, true period is embedded in it:

12. 33 ὅποι γὰρ μόνον ἡμῖν παρεῖναι οὐκ ἔζην ἄλλ' οἶδε παρ' αὐτῶς εἶναι ὥστ' ἐπὶ τούτῳ ἐστὶ πάντα τὰ κακὰ εἰργασμένοι τὴν τολίν πάντα τά γαθαὶ περὶ αὐτῶν λέγειν.

¹ The reason for the refusal of the Greek rhetoricians to use the term 'period' of a large group of cola lay in the feeling that the unity which is the foundation of the period was marred when too much was demanded either of the breath of the speaker or the attention of the hearer. The feeling was a true one. Gildersleeve (A. J. P. 24. 102) quotes the following from James Russell Lowell: "If I have attained to any clearness of style, I think it is partly due to my having had to lecture twenty years as a professor at Harvard. It was always present to my consciousness that whatever I said must be understood at once by my hearers or never. Out of this, I, almost without knowing it, formulated the rule that every sentence must be clear in itself and never too long to be carried, without risk of losing its balance, on a single breath of the speaker."
Here two antithetic periods are linked by a single clause in one grammatical sentence.¹

C. RHETORICAL FIGURES

55. The Greek rhetoricians from Theophrastus on ² distinguished two groups of rhetorical "figures," σχήματα λέξεως and σχήματα διανοιας.

56. Σχήματα λέξεως, figures of speech, modifications of speech for rhetorical effect.

57. (a) Figures connected with balance of cola.

1. ἀντίθεσις antithesis.³ The fondness for antithesis, already marked in the earlier literature, reached its height in the rhetorical work of Gorgias and his pupils. As compared with them, Lysias is moderate in its use. Yet we find it everywhere in his works, and often manifestly the result of studied art. He sometimes uses it with great effect, as in 12. 39 (see p. 53). Cp. 12. 32 f.; 12. 93; 24. 16–18; 25. 18.

2. παρισωσίς, precise or approximate equality of cola as measured by number of syllables.⁴

¹ Aristotle's theory of the 'period' was faulty in that it restricted it to the two types of the antithetic and the parallel structure. But the modern rhetoricians have gone to the other extreme in making the sensus suspensio the only basis of the period. From that error it has resulted that they speak of a period as being always a full sentence. They have lost sight of the fact that the unity of form and thought that makes a period may be quite independent of the unity of thought that makes a sentence. The error is already embodied in Whately's definition (Elements of Rhetoric, 3. 2. 12), although in his examples he gives due attention to periods based on antithesis. We should obtain a better theory of the rhetorical period by returning to the sound doctrine of Demetrius, modifying it only by removing the restriction of four cola. We should then treat the period as something quite independent of the sentence (though often coinciding with it), and should recognize as the three fundamental types those based on antithesis, parallelism, and sensus suspensio.

³ Aristotle, Rhetoric, 3. 9. 7–9.

1 Aristotle, 3. 9. 9; Anaximenes, c. 28; Demetrius, c. 25.

LYSIAS — 23
4. ὁμοιοτέλευτον, rhymed cola.\(^1\) This becomes especially marked in παρομοίωσις, as in most of the examples cited above.\(^2\)

Cp. 32. 25

| — ἀποδείξει | 12. 77 | — διδωκὼς |
| — ἡν | — εἰληφὼς |
| — ἕγγραψει | 24. 3–4 | — διώσω |
| — πλαινήσει | — εἰρήσθω |

5. ἐπαναφορά, the repetition of the same word at the beginning of successive cola.\(^3\) A fine example is that in 12. 21, πολλοὺς μέν —, πολλοὺς δὲ —, πολλοὺς δὲ — (see p. 348, § 46). Beside the examples under παρομοίωσις, cp. the following: 12. 77 ὀνειδίζων —, ὀνειδίζων. 12. 78 δικαίως μέν —, δικαίως δὲ —. 12. 94 ἐνθυμηθέντες μέν —, ἐνθυμηθέντες δὲ —. 16. 8 πολλοὺς μέν —, πολλοὺς δὲ —. 19. 9 ἐστερημένοι μέν —, ἐστερημένοι δὲ —. 32. 16, the striking and effective repetition of οὗ μετά — at the climax of the mother’s complaint. Cp. 12. 68; 34. 4; 34. 8.

Isocrates avoids this figure; Demosthenes is very fond of it; Lysias stands between the two.

6. ἀντιστροφή, the repetition of the same word at the close of successive cola.\(^4\) So 12. 57 — ἀδίκως —, ἀδίκως. 25. 20 — ἔχετε, — ἔχετε. But neither is an effective case of ἀντιστροφή, or to be compared with the famous example from Aeschines: —

| ὅστις δ' ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ λόγῳ τὴν ψήφον αἴτει |
| ὥρκον αἴτει |
| νόμον αἴτει |
| δημοκρατίαν αἴτει. |

7. ἐπαναστροφή, the final word of one colon becomes the initial word of the next.\(^5\)

So 25. 31 ἐκεῖνοι μὲν ὀλιγαρχίας οὐσὶς ἐπεθύμονων ὄντερ ὀντοὶ ὀντοὶ δὲ καὶ δημοκρατίας τῶν ἀντών ὄντερ ἐκεῖνοι.

9. συμπλοκή, the first and last words of one colon become the first and last words of the next.2

Aeschin. 3, 202 ἐπὶ σαυτῶν καλεῖς ἐπὶ τοὺς νόμους καλεῖς ἐπὶ τὴν δημοκρατίαν καλεῖς.

58. (b) Figures not connected with balance of cola.

A second group of figures of speech is independent of balance of cola, and so is less frequently found in Lysias.

1. ἀναδιπλώσις, the repetition of one or more words for rhetorical effect.3 This is too passionate a figure for Lysias’s restrained style. Cp. Aeschin. 3, 133 Θῆβαι δὲ, Θῆβαι, πόλις ἀστυνεῖτων, μεθ’ ἡμέραν μίαν ἐκ μέσης τῆς Ἑλλάδος ἀνήρπασται.

2. συννυμία, amplification by the use of synonyms. A favorite figure with Demosthenes; used sparingly by Lysias.4

Cp. 22, 21 ἐὰν ἀντιβολῶσιν ύμᾶς καὶ ἰκετεῦσι.

32. 11 ἡμετέροι με καὶ ἰκέτευε.

21. 21 ἐγὼ δ’ ὑμῶν δέομαι καὶ ἰκετεύω καὶ ἀντιβολῶ.

4 Alexander, Περὶ σχημάτων (Spengel, III. 30). Demetrius (c. 280) calls it ἐπιμονή ondæwelling, a happy term to bring out the real force of the figure.
3. ἀπονδετον, the omission of the conjunction in a series of coordinate words or phrases.\(^1\) A remarkable example is in the closing sentence of XII: ἀκρόαστε, ἐωράκαστε, πεπόνθατε, — ἔχετε· δικάζετε. Cp. the impassioned words of the mother in 32. 16.

5. παρονομασία, play on the sound and meaning of words.\(^3\) The Gorgian school delighted in this artificial word play. Lysias did not entirely escape their influence. Cp. 12. 32 ἀνωμένων, ἢδομένων. 12. 33 παρεῖναι, παρ' αὐτοῖς εἶναι. 12. 59 εὐνοοῦσατον, κακονοῦσατον. 24. 3 δυστυχήματα, ἐπιτηδεύματαν. 24. 7 δικαίως, ἀδίκως. ἄδικόσα, ἄθυμόσα. 25. 23 σωτηρίαν, τιμωρίαν. 25. 24 σωτηρίαν, σωτηρίαν. 32. 22 γράμματα, χρημάτων.

59. II. Σχήματα διανοιάς, figures of thought.

Lysias does not make frequent use of the so-called figures of thought. Some of these figures appear, of course, in the unstudied speech of any man. In Lysias the following only demand especial attention.

I. τὸ πυθματικὸν σχῆμα,\(^4\) the rhetorical question. A question is asked, not for information or advice, but only for rhetorical effect. Sometimes the speaker answers his own question. The rhetorical question sometimes stirs the emotions of the hearers, sometimes confounds the opponent, sometimes gives an air of candor to the claims of the speaker, and always quickens the attention of the hearers. The ordinarily quiet style of Lysias has little place for such questions, but they are occasionally used with great effect. They are oftenest used in appealing to the good sense of the jury as the speaker draws his con-

\(^3\) Alexander (Spengel, III. 36) limits the term to the particular case where the play is upon slight changes in the form of the word. For play on several meanings of the same word he has the terms ἀντιμετάθεσις, or σύγκρισις, or πλοκή (Ibid. p. 37).

clusions on the particular point under discussion. Cp. 12. 26–29; 12. 34, 36, 49, 52, 89; 16. 21; 19. 17, 23, 33, 34, 38; 22. 10, 16, 17, 18, 21: 24. 2, 3, 9, 12, 13, 21, 23; 32. 15, 27; 34. 2, 3, 11.

2. ἰποφορᾶ, the speaker raises objections, often in the form of questions, which the hearers or the opponents may be supposed to make. He answers the objections, sometimes putting the answer also in the form of a question. Lysias sometimes has an effective series of such questions and answers. Cp. 12. 39; 12. 82–4; 19. 29; 24. 23–5; 34. 6.

IV. MONEY AND PRICES AT ATHENS

60. The pre-Solonian system of weights, measures, and coinage of Athens was essentially that of Aegina and the Peloponnesus. Solon introduced the Eubocean system, based on a foot 297 mm. long; the square of this foot gave the surface unit; its cube, the unit of capacity; and the weight of this cubic foot of water (or wine), the unit of weight. After the time of Pisistratus these units seem to have been slightly reduced, and made to correspond to a linear foot of 296 mm. While Solon's other units of measure came into universal use in Athens, his linear foot failed to displace, for common purposes, the old Aeginetan foot of 330 mm.; but this old foot was reduced, probably to correspond to the reduction in the Solonian foot, giving the common working foot of about 328 mm.³

61. Attic coinage was based on the talent, the weight of a cubic foot of water (or wine).⁴ The unit of coinage was the drachma, a coin of pure silver, weighing one six-thousandth of a talent, and equal to Nissen bases his computation of the reduced Solonian foot upon the diminished weight of our specimens of Attic drachmas after the early period; then, assuming that the common (Aeginetan) foot was reduced in the same ratio, he computes its length as 328.89 mm. Dörpfeld concludes by comparison of the description of dimensions of parts of the Erechtheum (C.I.A. I. 322) with the measurements of such of these parts as survive, that the common Attic foot was one of 328 mm. (Ath. Mittheil. XV. 167 ff.).

62. The Persian daric and the Cyzicene stater were the chief gold coins of the ancient world until the Macedonian supremacy. The daric, a coin of pure gold, passed in Athens as equal to 20 drachmas. The Cyzicene stater was a coin of electrum (gold and silver); its current value in the time of Lysias was above that of the daric, but the exact value in drachmas is not known. We learn that about 328/7 it passed at Bosporus in the Crimea as equal to 28 Attic drachmas.

63. The real value of the drachma must be measured by its purchasing power. In the time of Lysias a drachma would pay a day’s wages of a carpenter, or stone cutter, or superintendent of building operations. It was the daily pay of a senator. A half-drachma a

That the Erechtheum wages were normal, although the work was perhaps a relief measure, appears from the fact that they bear about the same proportion to the cost of living at the close of the fifth century as do the higher wages of the Eleusinian inscription (C.I.A. II. ii. 834, b, c) to food prices in the later period to which it belongs (329/8 B.C. and the years following).

64. We have some data for determining the real value of the drachma as measured by its purchasing power in the food market. A drachma would buy \(\frac{1}{4}\) to \(\frac{1}{3}\) medimnus of barley meal (= \(1\frac{1}{2}\) to 3 pecks),\(^7\) the common food of the people.\(^8\) We have the following quo-

\(^6\) The average day's wages in the United States in 1900 for men corresponding to the Athenian one-drachma workmen were: for carpenters, $2.63; stone cutters, $3.45; brick layers, $3.84; stone setters, $3.82. U.S. Bureau of Labor, Bulletin No. 53, July, 1904.

\(^7\) The medimnus = 51.84 li. = 5.88 pk.

\(^8\) A sacrificial calendar from the Attic Tetrapolis, of the early part of the fourth century (the period of most of Lysias's speeches), published in the Papers of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Vol. VI. 374 ff., gives numerous quotations of prices. So far as we can test these by other evidence, they seem to be higher than the average. This table gives a \(\epsilon k r e o s\) of barley meal at 4 obols (= \(4\) dr. per medimnus). But from Aristoph. Eccles. 547 (392 B.C.) we infer that wheat was 3 dr. per medimnus at this period. We find later in the century the price of wheat to that of barley as 2:1 (C.I.A. IV. ii. 834 b) or 9:5 (C.I.A. IV. ii. 196, Beloch, II. 356 Anm. 4); assuming this ratio for the time when wheat was 3 dr., we have \(1\frac{1}{2}\) to \(1\frac{5}{3}\) dr. for unground barley. This agrees with the 2 dr. for barley meal mentioned in an anecdote of Socrates preserved by later writers (see Beloch, I. 411 Anm. 1).
The appellation of prices for live animals for sacrifice (naturally choice animals at a maximum price) in the Tetrapolis inscription: a cow (or ox?), 90 dr. = $16.16; a sheep, 11 to 17 dr. = $1.97 to $3.05; a goat, 12 dr. = $2.15; a sow, 20 dr. = $3.59; a pig, 3 dr. = 54 cts.¹ The cattle for a hecatomb in Athens in 410 B.C. cost on the average about 51 dr. (= $9.15) a head;² for the Delian festival of 374 B.C. about 77 dr. (= $13.82).³ Oil and wine were cheap. An early fourth-century inscription⁴ has oil at ½ obol a κοτύλη = about 20 cts. a gallon. At a later period, when all prices were higher, wine was 8 dr. a μετρητής = about 14 cts. a gallon.⁵ It is in accord with these prices that we find in a decree of thanks to a Delian who has rendered service to Athens, and is temporarily residing there, an appropriation of one drachma a day for his support (τροφή).⁶

65. These prices show that in reckoning the real value of any sum of Attic drachmas for the time of Lysias we must make large allowance for the high purchasing power of silver. Its value was greatest in the labor market, where slave labor kept wages at a minimum, while in the food market it was in all departments greater than with us,—in some, much greater.

66. But it must be remembered that a small fortune made a man rich in the Athens of the fourth century B.C., not only because the necessaries of life were cheap, but still more because the simplicity of life was such that even the rich demanded few luxuries.⁷

² C.I.A. I. 188. This is upon the assumption that a full hundred cattle were bought for the 5114 dr. recorded. Possibly this was not done. It is difficult to understand how cattle could have been so cheap at this period of the war.
³ C.I.A. II. 814.
⁴ C.I.A. II. 631.
⁵ C.I.A. II. ii. 834 b (329/8 B.C.).
⁶ C.I.A. II. i. 115 b (p. 408), to be dated not long after the middle of the fourth century.
⁷ We have most interesting details as to the increased prices of labor and of many commodities later in the fourth century, in the accounts preserved from building operations at Eleusis, 329 B.C. and after, C.I.A. II. ii. 834 b, IV. ii. 834 b, II. ii. 834 c. Cp. Speck, ibid. II. 532 ff.
THE MANUSCRIPTS

V. THE MANUSCRIPTS

67. Thirty-one speeches ascribed to Lysias have come down to us in the Codex Palatinus X (Heidelbergensis 88). All our other Mss. of Lysias were copied from this. Two of these speeches, however, numbered I and II, have also been preserved in another group of Mss. as a part of a collection of speeches by several authors.\(^1\) We have also parts of three more speeches (in modern editions numbered XXXII, XXXIII, and XXXIV) in the Mss. of the treatise of Dionysius on Lysias, where they were transcribed as specimens of Lysias's style.\(^2\) The Ms. X was written in the twelfth century. From an entry in a fourteenth-century hand on a blank leaf it appears that the Ms. was originally at Nicaea.\(^3\) It was taken to Italy, thence to Heidelberg; in 1622 it was taken to Rome, thence to Paris by command of Napoleon in 1797; in 1815 it was taken back to Heidelberg.\(^4\) The Ms. consists of one hundred and forty-two leaves of parchment. Before it reached Italy it had lost one whole quaternion,\(^5\) two leaves in another place, and a single leaf in still another.\(^6\) The fact that all the other Mss. have lacunae at the places where X is mutilated is the conclusive proof that they were copied from it. The archetype of X had a considerable number of variant readings, which are preserved in X. The readings of the other Mss., where they differ from those of X, are conjectures of critics or copyists. Readings of C (Laurentianus plat. 57, 4) are occasionally cited in the following notes, not as ancient testimony, but as giving the origin of current corrections of X.

\(^1\) Erdmann has shown that Speeches I and II in the Ms. X came to it from a different archetype from that which furnished the others. This other archetype was the common source of I and II of Ms. X and I and II of the other group. Erdmann, De Pseudolysiae epitaphii codicibus, Lipsiae, 1881; Lysias, Strassburg, 1891.

\(^2\) On the Mss. of Dionysius see Appendix, XXXII, introductory note.

\(^3\) Schöll, Hermes, XI. 203.

\(^4\) For the history of the Ms. see Sauppe, Epistola Critica ad Godofredum Hermannum scripta, Lipsiae, 1841.

\(^5\) This contained the close of Speech XXV, the whole speech entered in the index of the Ms. as Κατὰ Νεκίδου ἀργίας, and the beginning of XXVI.

\(^6\) These two leaves contained the close of Speech V and the beginning of VI. The single leaf was between §§ 49 and 50 of VI.
There are many impossible readings in $X$, which must be corrected by pure conjecture. Of the speeches printed in this volume, the nineteenth has the greatest number of corruptions of text.

CRITICAL NOTES

In the following critical notes the statements of Ms. readings are taken from the notes of Thalheim's critical edition of 1901. Minor orthographical errors of X in which Ms. authority is not significant are corrected in the printed text without comment; otherwise all variations of the printed text from the readings of X are recorded, as are all variations (except in punctuation) from the text of Thalheim’s critical edition (1901).

The following abbreviations are used in the critical notes:

Cob., Cobet.    Rs., Reiske.
F., Fuhr.       Tayl., Taylor.
Frb., Frohberger. Th., Thalheim.
Mor., Morgan.    West., Westermann.

XII

1. εἰργασταί. Th. Clauses introduced by τοιούτος, οὕτως, and the like, following the main statement without other connective, fall into two classes: (a) exclamatory clauses, often expressing indignation or surprise (so Lys. 12. 84, 13. 31, 12. 17, 12. 44, 13. 60, 28. 6), sometimes giving the general fact or principle of which the preceding statement is an illustration (so Lys. 1. 2, 1. 32, 32. 21), sometimes expressing the writer’s final reflection called out by a series of statements (so Thuc. 2. 65. 13); (b) clauses which, like the one under discussion, give the ground for the preceding statement (so Herod. 3. 85; Dem. 20. 141, 22. 68; Eurip. Medea 718, 789). In class b the preceding statement is in effect a ὅστε clause, so that the connection is much closer than in class a; οὐκ ἀρξασθαί δοκεῖ, τοιαῦτα εἰργασταί = τοιαῦτα εἰργασταί ὅστε οὐκ ἀρξασθαί δοκεῖ. When two such clauses are followed by a ὅστε clause, the last clause tends to draw the middle (τοιούτος) clause toward itself, giving the effect of a harsh asyndeton after the first clause. Thalheim’s punctuation helps to resist this.

2. πολλῆς ἀφθονίας οὔσης ὑπὲρ τῶν δημοσίων ὀργίζεσθαι Herw., Rn.-F.; πολλῆς ἀφθονίας οὔσης ὑπὲρ τῶν ἔδωκά ἡ ὑπὲρ τῶν δημοσίων ὀργίζεσθαι Χ, Th. Even if we accept the single ἡ where we should expect ἦ . . . ἦ, the statement as it stands in Χ is not true. It is not a fact that all citizens have either public or private grounds of anger; all have public grounds, and many have private grounds in addition. Th. interprets ἡ as than through the comparative force of ἀφθονία, citing δεξαίμην ἄν ἡ 10. 21.

3. τοιήσωμαι Vulg., Sch.; τοιήσομαι Χ, Th. The probability of the contamination of τοιήσωμαι by the following τειράσωμαι seems greater than that Lysias used so rare a construction, found nowhere else in the orators. Weber, Entwicklungsgesch. der Absichtssätze, II. 94; GMT. 367.

5. ὁνήροι Rs., Th.; ὁνηροὶ μὲν X. — προτρέψαι Wdn.; τραπέζαι X, Th., a reading which requires an awkward change of subject. — τοιαύτα Markl.; καὶ τουαύτα X.

6. πενεσθαί Markl.; γενέσθαι X. — τὸν δ’ ἀρχῆν Scaliger; τὸν ἄρ-χῆν X; τὸν ἄρχην δὲ Rs., Th.

7. ἦνεκα C; ὦνεκα (for ὦνεκα) X (Lampros, Hermes, X. 264).

11. ἔπειδη δὲ F.; ἔπει δὲ X, Th. I have accepted Fuhr’s conclusion that Lysias did not use ἔπει temporal (Rn.-F. on 32. 2, Anh.), and that ἔπειδη must be substituted whenever ἔπει temporal has been handed down. In all of these cases ἔπει is followed by δὲ. Of Fuhr’s cases only three are attested by the Mss. of Lysias (12. 11, 13. 43, 23. 14).

In Fr. 88 ἔπει is clearly causal; in 32. 2 it is more causal than temporal. — ὁμολόγησεν: ὁμολάλ. X (Schöll, Hermes, II. 215). Pison had agreed to accept a talent; he now broke his agreement. I have written ὁμολόγησεν (repeated from § 9) as preferable to ὁμολόγησα C, ὁμολόγων Sch. (conj.), ὁμολόγητο Fritzsche, Th. — δαρεικοῦσ: Maussac; καρικοῦς X.

12. ὁποι Codex Vindob.; ὁπη X. — εἰς τάδελφοι Cob.; εἰς τᾶ του ἄδελφοι X, Th.

15. ἢδη: ἢδεν X, Th. I have followed Morgan in restoring the older form here and elsewhere. Kühn. § 213. 5.

17. τοῦτ’ ἐκεῖνων Fritzsche; τὸ ἐπ’ ἐ. X; τὸ ἐπ’ ἐ. Aldus.

18. εἴς οὐδεμᾶς Cob.; οὐδὲ μᾶς X. — κλεισίων Sauppe (Meisterhans 51); κλίσιων X.

19. κτήσεσθαι Dobr.; κτήσασθαι X. See GMT. 127, Kühn. 389, Anm. 7. — ὅτε πρῶτον Hertlein (Hermes, 13. 10), Rn.-F.; ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον X, Frb.-Geb., Th. ὅτε τὸ πρῶτον can mean only when . . . the first time, or when once. — ἤλθεν X; ἤλθων Th., with the comma after οἰκίαν instead of after Μηλόβιος.

20. ἀξίους γε οὕτας: ἀξίους ἔχοντας X. — πάσας μὲν Rs.; πάσας X.

21. ἀτίμους Markl.; ἀτίμους τῆς πόλεως X.

22. τοσοῦτον: τοιοῦτον X.

24. ὅσιον: ὅσον X. — ὅ τι Brunck; εἴ τι X.

25. Ἡ: ἢν X, Th. I have followed Morgan in restoring the older Attic form (Kühn. § 298. 4). — Ἀντέλεγον, ἰνα μὴ ἀποθάνητε Usener (Rhein. Mus. 25. 590); ἀντέλεγον. ἵνα ἀποθάνωμεν; ἵνα μὴ ἀποθάνητε Χ. The reading of Χ can stand only as a sarcastic question, ill fitted to the direct, rapid series of questions, and weakening the force of the outburst Εἰς', ὥστε σχετικάτα κτλ. 'Αντέλεγον. ἵνα ἀποθάνωμεν ἢ μὴ ἀποθάνωμεν; "Ηνα μὴ ἀποθάνητε. Rs., Th.

26. ἀποκτείνειας Kayser; ἀποκτείνης Χ, Th.; ἀποκτείνοις Author Peri ἑρωτήματος Spengel, I. 166. The change of mood within the sentence would not in general be surprising, but where the two verbs are in antithesis the change is less likely, and for this speech very unlikely, when it carries with it the destruction of the rhymed ending.

—οἷεί δἐν ἐμὸι Φ.; ὁἷεί ἐμὸι Χ; δἐν before δοῦναι Θ. after Madvig.

27. προσετάξηθι Rs.; ἐτάξηθι Χ. — ἤττον Canter; πίστιν Χ.

29. αὐτῆς Χ; om. Dobr., Th. For examples of the intensive standing alone in oblique case, see Kühn. 468, Anm. 1. — παρά τοῦ Καντερ; παρ’ αὐτοῦ Χ.

30. μὲν δὴ Κ; μηδὲν δὴ Χ. — σφῶειν τε . . . παρόν Σαύππη; σφιξόντα . . . ὑν Χ.—πᾶσιν Rs.; πάντες Χ.

31. τοίς Rs.; τοίτοις Χ.

34. ποτ’ ἐποίησας Dobr.; ποτὲ ποιήσας Χ. Gildersleeve defends ποιήσας, “as the question may safely be taken as a generic question” (GS. 439). But the parallelism with ἀπεκτείνας makes the distinctively past form more probable. —ἐτυγχάνετε . . . ἀπεφησάσθη: ἐτύχετε . . . ἀπεφησάσθη Χ; ἐτυγχάνετε . . . ἀπεφησάσθη Καυσέρ; ἐτύχετε . . . ἀπεφησάσθη Th. (opt. after Markl.). The aor. indic. with ἀν, to express an unreal conclusion belonging to time immediately future, is rare, but this passage is perhaps supported by ἀν χαρίσασθαι 19. 26; see GMT. 414 (to the examples there add Eur. Medea, 426) and CP. Haley on Eur. Alcestis, 125. The unusual aor. of the apodosis probably led to the corruption of the protasis in the Mss.—ἵεις Φ.; ἵεις Χ.

35. ὑμέτεροι Rs.; ὑμέτεροι Χ.—τότερον Hamaker; ὅτι ἦ Χ, Th.; ἦ ὅτι Fritzsche. The reading of Χ gives the absurd statement that ‘the citizens will learn to-day that wrong-doers will either be punished or go free.’ Fritzsche’s remedy is simple, but we feel the lack of ὅτι with the second ἦ (cp. ἦ ὡς . . . ἦ ὡς, § 34).—σφάς γ’ F.; σφάς X; σφόδρα σφάς Wdn. Lysias says either ἦ ποι. . . γε or ἦ ποι. σφόδρα; see 7. 8, 13. 69, 25. 17, 27. 15, 30. 17; cp. Dem. 55. 18; Thuc. 5. 100, 6. 37. 2; Andoc. I. 24, 90.—ὑμῶν: ἦμῶν Χ.—τηρομένους Χ, Th.; τετηρομένους Καντερ; κηδομένους Ρν.; τιμωρομένους Markl.; διατεινομένους Frb. The middle τηρομένους is appropriate here; the allies are ‘on their guard’ against the exiles in the interest of the Athenians; cp. Thuc. 4. 108. 1; Ar. Wasps, 372, 1386.

36. τεθνεώτων: τεθνεώτων X. — ἀκρίτων: ἀκρίτως X. — ὕψ C; ἄψ X.

37. οὐδ’ ἀν... δικὴν δοῦναι ἀξίαν δύναντο: οὐδ’,... δικὴν δοῦναι δύναντ’ ἀν X. In favor of the position of ἀν after οὐδ’ (Herw.) is the fact that the four passages in Lysias similar to this have ἀν with the introductory word. These passages also have ἀξίαν either immediately after δικὴν or separated by a single word. The position of ἀξίαν after δοῦναι (Markl.) breaks up the unpleasant succession of similar initial sounds in δικὴν δοῦναι δύναντ’ ἀν. To write ἀξίαν after δύναντ’ ἀν (Fr., Th.) is to add to this unpleasant sound the awkward confusion of sound between ἀν ἀξίαν and ἀναξίαν.

38. κατηγορημένα C; κατηγορημένα (sic) X. — ἢ ὅς πόλεως Meutzner; πόλεως X; ἢ πόλεως Markl., Th.

39. ψμετέραν Rs.; ἡμετέραν X.

40. τοσαύτα ἐσκύλευσαν Rs.; ἐσκύλευσαν τοσαύτα Sch., Th.; om. τοσαύτα X. — ἄφελοντο,... κατέσκαψαν Wdn., Th.; ἄφελοντο;... κατέσκαψαν; Vulg. — ὅτι ἐαντοῖς Sluiter after Tayl. and Rs.; οἷς αὐτοῖς X.

41. αὐτοῦ Dobree; αὐτῶν X.

42. ἐπραξεν Ald.; ἐπραξαν X.

43. ψμετέρῳ Steph.; ἡμετέρῳ X.

44. φυλάς Tayl.; φυλακάς X.—χρεία Bekk.; χρή X.—ψηφιείσθε Cob.; Ψηφίστηθε X.

45. καλὸς Frb.; καὶ X.—ὑμᾶς Markl.; ημᾶς X.

47. καίτοι κάκεινοι Hertlein (Hermes, 13. 10); καίτοι X, Th.

48. ἐχρὴν αὐτὸν Bekk.; ἐχρήν ἄν X. αὐτὸν (intensive) adds greatly to the force and displaces a troublesome ἄν. Goodwin’s defense of this ἄν (GMT. p. 410) rests upon the translation “have to” for ἐχρήν: “if he had been an honest man, he would have had, first, to abstain from lawlessness in office,” “not being an honest man, he did not have to abstain from lawlessness in office.” But “have to” is just ambiguous enough to be misleading; it covers both external and moral necessity. If in Goodwin’s phrase we substitute the strict translation of χρὴν, obligation, we have, “not being an honest man, he was not under obligation to abstain from lawlessness in office,” the fatal absurdity which La Roche pointed out. The apodosis of ἐπερ ἵν ἄνηρ ἄγαθος is in μὴ παρανόμως ἀρχεῖν and μηνυνθῆν γίγνεσθαι; both are contrary to fact, ἐχρὴν is not. — ἀλλὰ τὰ C; ἀλλὰ τάληθη X.
50. αὐτῷ Cont.; αὐτὰ ὤ X.
51. τὰ πράγματα Geb. (cp. 13. 60); μοι ταῦτα X.
52. εἶ γὰρ Schott; καὶ γὰρ X. — ἦν C; ἄν ἦν X. — κατειληφότοσ: κατειληφότες X.— εἰνοιαν Markl., cp. § 49; συνουσίαν X.
53. (1) πρὸς ἄλληλους διαλλαγῆςευθαί (Hamaker) ὡς ἀμφότεροι ἐδείξαν (Canter);
(2) πρὸς ἄλληλους ἐσεθαί, ὡς ἀμφότεροι ἐδοξάν X;
(3) πρὸς ἄλληλους ἐσεθαί, ὡς ἀμφότεροι ἐδείξαν (Canter) Th.;
(4) πρὸς ἄλληλους ἐσεθαί, ὡς ἀμφότεροι ἐδείξαμεν, Geel, Rn.-F.;
(5) τὰ πρὸς ἄλλ. ἐσεθαί, ὡς ἀμφότερους ἐδοξέων Frb.

With (3) Th. supplies τὰς διαλλαγὰς from τῶν διαλλαγῶν above as subject of ἐσεθαί, but the hearer almost inevitably takes ἐσεθαί with the subject of εἶχομεν; Fuhr so interprets it, and translates (4) Wir würden beiderseits gegeneinander sein, wie wir beiderseits zeigten, a translation that leaves the thought vague and incomplete. The same objection holds against (5). For (1) is the fact that the desire for reconciliation and its defeat by Eratosthenes’s friends is the central thought of the passage, and ought to be definitely expressed.—αὐτοὺς X. We might expect a more definite word, yet the very vagueness of αὐτοὺς fits the delicacy with which Lysias is speaking to a part of the jury of their own defeat, and the restrained expression κρείττοις ὄντες.

55. γενόμενος Frb.; ὁ τῶν τριάκοντα γενόμενος X.— καὶ (after Κριτία) om. X.— αὐτόὶ Markl.; αὐτοί X.; τοῖς Rs.; ἦ τοῖς X.
56. ὦ καὶ Rn.; οἱ καὶ X.
57. εἰ δ’ ὑμεῖς δικάιος, οἱ τριάκοντα ἀδίκως Rs.; εἰ δ’ ὑμεῖς ἀδίκως, οἱ τριάκοντα δικάιος X.— ἦ Στέφ. δ’ X.
58. αὐτῶν: αὐτῶν X.— στρατεύεσθαι X; στρατεύεσσασθαι C, defended by F. as perhaps correct, on the ground that πείθειν usually takes the aor. F.'s many Lysian examples owe the use of the aor. to the nature of the verb itself, rather than to the connection with πείθειν. For pres. of an action similar to στρατεύεσθαι cf. Aes. 2. 63 πείθων ὑμᾶς μὴ προσέχειν ... μηδὲ ... βοηθέιν; Dem. 5. 5 ἢνίκ' ἐπειθὼν τίνες ὑμᾶς ... βοηθέιν Πλοῦτάρχῳ. Other instances of πείθειν with pres. infin. are Xen. Anab. 5. 1. 14; Demos. 32. 7; Aeschin. 1. 48, 2. 154; Thuc. 2. 33. 1, 2. 67. 1.
59. ἐδανείσαστο: ἐδανείσαστο X.
60. πόλεις ὀλίγος Cob.; πόλεις X, Th.—οἷς Tayl.; οἷς X.
61. οὐκ οἴδ' ὅ τι F., who cites 7. 42, 10. 31, 12. 37, 16. 9, 22. 22, 24. 21; οἶδ' ὅ τι X; οὐκ οἴδ' ὅτι Th.—πλείστον Cont.; πλεῖστον X.
62. ἂν om. X. — παραστῇ, ὡς X. The thought is clear as it stands; the supposed objection that may arise in the mind of some juror is precisely the objection that Demosthenes raises in 18. 15 εἶτα κατηγορεῖ μὲν ἐμοῦ, κρίνει δὲ τοῦτον, and it is presented in the same terse antithesis. For παραστήναι ὡς cp. Plat. Phaedrus 233 c; Thuc. 4. 61. 2, 4. 95. 2: Andoc. 1. 54; Demos. Epis. 3. 36 (otherwise παραστήναι is followed by infin., Thuc. 6. 34. 9, 6. 68. 3, 6. 78. 1). — ἀπολογήσεσθαι Markl.; ἀπολογήσωσθαι X. — ἐκεῖνος Tayl.; ἐκεῖνος X.

64. γὰρ ἢν Rs.; γὰρ X. — τοὺς Θηραμένους Franz; τοῦ Θ. X. — αἰτίου . . . γεγενημένου Bekk.; αἰτίου . . . γεγενημένους X.

65. ταῦτ' Classen; ταῦτ' X. — αὐτών Sauppe, followed by later editors generally; αὐτῷ X, Wdn.

66. τῇ πολιτείᾳ Dobr.; τῇ πόλει X; om. Th. — Κάλλαισχρον: κάλλασσαρχρον X. — προτέρους Canter; προστέρους X.

67. 'Δρχεπτόλεμον: ἀρχεπτόλεμον X.

69. σωτηρία Markl.; σωτηρίαν X. — ἕνεκα West.; οὗνεκεν X. Cp. on 32. 10. — ταῦθ' ἀ πρὸς Vulg.; ταῦτα πρὸς X. — ἐπιτρέψατε Cont.; ἐπέμψατε X. — γυναίκας: γυναίκα X.

71. ὁμολογημένος West.; λεγόμενος X. — ἔκεινων Markl.; ἔκεινον X.

73. ύμᾶς Cont.; ἡμᾶς X. — ἐκκλησιαζέτε Frb.; ἐκκλησιαζέτε X. The other form of augment, which X gives in Lys. 13. 73 and 76, ἐκκλησιαζάζε, was also certainly current (Kühn. I. ii. p. 415).

74. μέλοι: μέλλοι X. — ποιήσειθ . . . κελεύει Cob.; ποιήσαιθ . . . κελεύνι X. With the reading of X we have after εἶπε the change from opt. of ind. disc. to indic., then back to opt. The reason for shifting to the vivid ἔσται is clear, but it is surprising if the speaker shifts back to the opt. as he comes to the culminating and emphatic clause of the period. Moreover ποιήσαιθ of X must stand for aor. subj. with ἂν; but the clause is emphatically minatory, so that we should expect fut. indic. or fut. opt. These considerations make probable (not necessary) the emendation ποιήσειθ' . . . κελεύει.

76. παρήγγελτο Cob.; παρηγγέλλετο X, Th. — δέκα α' Ald.; δέκα X.

77. δεῖ C; δοκεῖ X. — οὐδὲν φροντίζοντων Δακ. Dobr. (See on Βους 16. 13); οὐδὲν φροντίζοντος δὲ τῶν Δακ. X. — αὐτός αἰτίος X; αὐτοῖς αἰτίοις Kayser, Th. — αὐτοῖς ἔργοι C; αὐτῶ ἔργῳ X.

APPENDIX

78. αἰτίου γεγενημένου Rs.; αἰτοὶ γεγενημένοι X.—ἡδη X; δις Sauppe. — γὰρ X; γὰρ πρότερον Frb.; γὰρ ποτὲ Geb. Additions like πρότερον, ποτὲ, are not needed with ἡδη and the aor., however tempting to readers whose language requires a plup. to represent one past act as clearly preliminary to another.

79. τούτων Rn.; τούτων X.—μαχομένους μὲν Cont.; μαχομένους X.
80. μέλειν: μέλειν X.—ὑμείς ὑμᾶν αὐτοῖς F.; ὑμῖν αὐτοῖς X, Th.; ὑμῖν ὑμεῖς αὐτοὶ Funkhanel. The clauses μεθὲ... πόλει καὶ κάκιον... βοηθήσατε form the culmination of a series of antitheses; it is, therefore, almost necessary to have a word (ὑμεῖς or αὐτοῖς) expressed in antithesis to τίχῃς. Thalheim’s citation (Fr.-Th. p. 187) of 21. 14 for the omission of ὑμεῖς is not to the point, for there the antithesis is not between ἐμέ and the subject of ἀδικήσετε, but between ἐμέ and ὑμᾶς αὐτοῖς. His objection to the disturbing effect of the insertion of ὑμεῖς after the long series of verbs where it has not been expressed is met by the closely parallel construction of 18. 15.

81. κατηγόρηται Bake; κατηγορεῖτε X.—μὲν F.; δὲ X. Th. κατηγόρηται marks the transition from the attack on the career of Eratosthenes and the other moderates. The substitution of μὲν for the meaningless δὲ is therefore justified by 27. 1.—ὁ αὐτὸς Markl.; αὐτὸς X.—κρυομένων Rs.; γενομένων X.

82. καὶ ὁ ὅτι Dobr.; καὶ ὁ ὅτι X.—ἀκρίτους: ἀκρίτως X.
83. ἀποκτείνατε Bekk.; ἀποκτείνοιτε X.—ἀκρίτως C; ἀκρίτως X.—δημεύσατε Rs.; δημεύσετε X.—τὰς οἰκίας Sch.; οἰκίας X.—ἐξεπορθήσαν; Th. follows Frb.-Geb. in writing ἐξεπορθήσαν. Without the interrogation ἦ... ἦ is less fitting than καὶ ... καὶ.

84. αὐτῶν τὴν ἄδιν Auger; αὐτῶν X; αὐτῶν ἰκανήν Sintenis.—δύνασθε Bekk.; δύνασθε X.—δοκεῖ: δοκῇ X. — τοσοῦτον ἢ Rs.; τοσοῦτον ἢ X.
85. ἐδύνατο Markl.; δύνατο X.—ἐλθεῖν C; ἑλεῖν X.—ἐσεσθαι Καὶ Cob.; ἐσεσθαί τῶν πεπραγμένων καὶ X; ἔστ. τῶν τε πεπ. καὶ Rs., Th. Cp. 22. 19, 30. 34.

88. τῶν ἐχθρῶν Geb.; παρὰ τῶν ἐχθρῶν X.—δεινὸν εἶ: δεινὸν οἶ X.—ἐπ' added by Rs.; ἀπολέσασιν ἦτον X, with mark in the margin signifying corruption. — βοηθεῖν Vulg.; βοηθεῖν X.
89. polu Vulg.; polloX; polloRs., Th. Lysias has pollo with πλείων in 17. 6, 24. 16, 29. 8; otherwise with the comparative he always uses polu. — ρφωn Steph.; ράδιον X.
90. deîste Markl.; deîaste X.
91. ψηφίζεσθαι Bekk.; ἀποψηφίζεσθαι X. — κρύβην εἶναι Sch.; κρύβην X.

1. συνήδη: συνήδεων X, Th. I have followed Morgan in restoring the older form here and elsewhere; cp. 12. 15; Kühn. § 213. 5.
2. ἁγιός Rs.; ἁγιὸς ἡ κακῶς X.
3. καὶ περὶ Rs., Fr.-Geb.-Th.; περὶ X; καὶ (without περὶ) Herw., Th.— ἵππευον Rn.; ἵππευον οὗτ ἐπεθήμον X.
4. ἐπεδήμομεν added after πολιτείας by Markl., after καθαιρομένων by Kayser.— μεθισταμένης τῆς πολιτείας Ald.; μεθισταμένη τῆς πολιτείας X.
5. μηδὲν Francken; τοὺς μηδὲν X, Th. There is no separation of two classes, but close connection of two characteristics of one class, the second, indeed, growing out of the first.
6. ἐγγεγραμμένοι Markl.; ἐγγεγραμμένοι X. — ἀναπράξητε Harp. s.v. κατάστασις; ἀναπράττηται X; ἀναπράττητε Vulg. before Sch.; ἀναπράξατε Sauppe. Mor. defends ἀναπράχατε as referring to "the repeated number of cases"; but Lysias is quite as likely to have thought of the summary result ("upshot aorist") as of the detailed process, so that it becomes purely a question of the weight to be given to the quotation as independent textual evidence.
7. ὃς κατάστασιν παραλαβόντα F.; οὕτε κατάστασιν παραλαβόντα X; οὕτε κατάστασιν καταβαλόντα Bake, Th. The reading of X breaks the connection of thought; the whole argument turns on the absence of the name from the phylarchs’ list. — ὦτι Kayser; διότι X. — ἀποδείξειν Rs.; ἀποδείξειν X.

8. ἣ: ἦν X, Th. I have followed Morgan in restoring the older Attic form. Kühn. § 298. 4. Cp. on § 1 and on 12. 25. — ὦτε μηδέν δὲ ἄλλο με Tayl.; ὦστ έι μηδέν διαβάλλομαι X.

9. αὐτῆς Frb.; ταύτης X; cp. 19. 55. — μόνων: μονον X.

10. διώκησα Sauppe; διώκησα X; ἡ τὰς F.; ἡ περὶ τὰς X.

11. Βουσιφίωθες Pertz; τοῖς Βουσιφίωθες X. In nominibus gentium usurpandis Lysias constantem usum sequitur: nomina ubivis sine articulo ponit, Pertz, Quaest. Lys. I. 6. — ἀσφάλειαν εἰναι δεῖν νομίζοντας X. δεῖν has caused much question, but Geb. has successfully defended it by comparison with Thuc. 4. 10. 4 ἄρτο νεόν, αἰς πολλά τὰ καύρα δεί ἐν τῇ θαλάττῃ ἕμβηναι. Here δεῖ has clearly the force of “may be expected.” Geb.’s comparison of Aeschin. 3. 170 is less convincing, for there δεῖ refers to what ought to be found to meet a definition, as well as to what one expects to find. — ἡγουμένου: the synonym to νομίζοντας in a parallel clause is quite in Lysias’s style, but it is strange that a new infinitive does not come with it. Perhaps Weidner’s conjecture is right, κίνδυνον ἐφεστάναι ἡγουμένου. Kayser would erase ἡγουμένου. — εἶπον Dobr., cp. 1. 23; ἔτι X; ἐφήν C, Th. (but only one prose instance of φημὶ = κελεύω is cited, Xen. Cyrop. 4. 6. 11). — παρασκευάσαντα marg. Ald.; παρασκευάσαντι X.

15. ἐναποθανόντων Markl.; ἐνθανόντων X. — ὑστερος Cont.; ὑστερον X. — Στειριῶς Cob.; Στειριῶς X. See Meisterhans,§ 57. 10. — τοῦ τάσιν Bekk.; τοῖς τάσιν X.

16. προσέδον X; παρέδον Ηerbst, on the ground that the post was seized to prevent the victorious Spartans from ‘passing on’ to the north; but the point here is rather that Mantitheus would voluntarily leave a post which was so strong that the enemy could not approach (προσέδον) for a place of great danger. — ἀποχωρίσαι X; ἀποκληρώσαι M. The emphasis is upon the fact that a division was to be removed from their position of safety. — σεσωμένους Wdn.; σεσωμένους X, Th. Kühn. I. ii. p. 544.

18. κομᾶ Hamaker; τολμᾶ X.

19. ἀμπεχόμενον Dobr.; ἀπερχόμενοι X.

20. τά τῆς R.; τῶν τῆς X.
21. τοὺς τοιούτους Francken; τούτους X. — πολλού ἄξιοις Cob.; cp. 10. 3. 33. 3; ἄξιοις X.; ἄξιοις τυνός P. R. Müller, Th. Lysias is speaking of leadership in public affairs; he would hardly say that the people considered political leaders as the only people worth anything; this would reflect on too many of his auditors.

Title, ΥΠΕΡ: ΥΠΟ Χ.

2. τὴν προθυμίαν F., after Frag. 70; om. τὴν X. — ὀσπερ καὶ West.; om. καὶ X.

3. τοῦ μεγίστου Francken after Andoc. I. 1; om. τοῦ X.

4. ὅπο πάντων τῶν παραγεμένων Dobr.; ὑπὲρ πάντων τῶν πεπραγμένων X.; ὑπὸ πάντων ὑπὲρ τῶν πεπραγμένων Sauppe, Th.

6. ἰδεῖν Cont.; δανότατον X. — ἱθέλοντες Pertz (Meisterhans,3 p. 178); θέλοντες X.

9. ἀνήλωσεν Tayl.; ἀνάλωσεν X.

10. ὑμῖν: the dative with δαπανῶντος is not impossible, though not used elsewhere by Lysias, but the change from εἰς αὐτὸν to the dat. gives reason for the suspicion that a word is lost in the second clause (δόντως, Sluiter; χαρηγοῦντος Markl.; ἀναλώσαντος Francken; λητουργοῦντος P. Müller; ἐπιδιδόντος, Wdn.). — ἀλλοθείν ἔχωσιν F. (ἀλλοθείν after West., ἔχουσιν after Sch.); μὴ δόσιν X. The correction of the impossible reading of X is pure conjecture; κερδάνωσιν Th. after Cont.; λάβωσιν C; λαβεῖν δυνηθοῦσι Rs.; κτήσωσιν ταί Dobr.

11. τοῦ ἀγῶνος Halbertsma; καὶ τοῦ ἄγ. Χ, Th.— ἀκροασαμένους ἡμῶν: ἀκροασαμένων ἡμῶν X. — νομίζητε Rs.; νομίζεται X.

12. ἐμὴν ἀδέλφην Tayl.; ἀδελφὴν X.

13. τῇ τε πόλει Rs.; τῇ πόλει X. — ἐν γε Rs.; ἐν τε X. — βίου παντός καί: βίου πάν καὶ X.

15. ἱθέλοντων: θελόντων X; see on § 6.—οὐκ ἔδωκεν Bekk.; οὐ δέδωκεν X. — ὁντι Φαϊδρῳ Tayl.; φαϊδρῳ (sic) ὁντι X. — τῷ after Φαϊ—δρω add. Rs.—κατ' Sauppe; καὶ X. There were only two daughters (§ 17).

17. τοῖν: ταῖν X.—νεὶ Th.; νεῶ X.
18. ἄν X; δὴ Sauppe.—ἀρκοῦν ἢν P. Müller; ἢν X.
19. Διονυσίου Sauppe; καὶ Δυσίου X. Against the Ms. reading three objections have been raised: (1) It makes Lysias a ἕνος of the Athenian Aristophanes. Now while Lysias was not an Athenian citizen, he had lived at Athens as boy and youth, and he had now been back in the city some twenty-five years; it is hard to believe that he would think of his relation to Aristophanes as ἕνοια. (2) If Lysias was looked upon as a suitable man to help win Dionysius’s friendship in 393, it is surprising to find him in 388, in the Olympic speech, urging the Greeks to unite against him. (3) It would certainly not be in good taste for Lysias to dismiss the general Eunomus without a word of appreciation, while calling attention to his own services to the democracy. Sauppe’s conjecture restores to ἐνοία its normal force, and gives to the participial clauses following τοῦ Εὐνόμου a real meaning, for they bring out the fitness of Eunomus for the embassy by showing his cordial relations to Dionysius on the one side and the democracy on the other. With the Ms. reading there would be a departure from the real point, in order to throw around the memory of Aristophanes something of the popularity that Lysias enjoys.

20. τὰς τριήρεις Frb.; τριήρεις X.—παρεσκευάστο Bbek.; παρεσκευάσατο X, Th. The context demands either plupf. or impf.
21. δέκα add. West. In § 43 the article (τὰς δέκα ναὸς) implies that the number was given here.—τοῦς add. Frb.
22. οὖν Frb.; δ’ οὖν X. — ἀπορῶν Kayser; εἰπὼν X. — ἢ Steph.; ἢ X, Rn-F.
23. μηδενός Markl.; μηδὲν X. — ἐκ Κύπρου Th. follows Rn. in omitting these words, and their origin as a gloss is so easily explained that they cannot be defended with any certainty. Yet the expression is a possible one with ἀπορήσεων, as we see when we use the positive form, πάντων εἰπορήσεων ἐκ Κύπρου (see Rn.-F. ad loc.).—ὑπολιπεσθαι Lipsius; ὑπολείπεσθαι X.—οὐκ εἶ ἢν: οὐκ εἰπεν (sic) X; οὐχ ἢ ἢν Bkk., Th. The Ms. reading presents no difficulty if we understand πάντα to mean all the money required for the expedition, not all of Aristophanes’s property (τῶν δύνων).—ἐφ’ ἵπ αἰ: Rn.; τε X, Th. To the strangeness of the coördination of χαρίσασθαι and κομίσωσθαι in the Ms. reading is added the difficulty of explaining μή for οὐ (μή ἐλάττω). — Κάλει . . . ΜΑΡΤΥΡΕΣ supplied by West. to fill the lacuna involved in τῶν μὲν μαρτύρων immediately following ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ in X.

24. ἔχρησαν τὸ ἄργυριον Rs.; ἐχρήσαντο X.

25. μὲν . . . φιάλην χρυσῆν: φιάλης μὲν χρυσῆς X; Sauppe transposed μὲν to its place after ἔλαβε. — ὑποθήσει δὲ Ἄριστοςόφανει λαβών F. after Rn. (who wrote δὲ εἰδέως Ἄριστ.;) ὅς Ἀριστοφάνης λαβεῖν X; Th. omits ὅς Ἄριστ. (after Dobr.), and writes βούλεται δὲ λαβεῖν (after Frb.). While ὅς Ἄριστοφάνης is easily explained as a gloss on αὐτῷ, yet the meaning is not quite clear if the name does not appear before § 26. — ὑ Σαύππε; ἄν X; ἀ Αλδ. — τὴν τρημαρχίαν: X combines τὰς τρημαρχίας and τὴν τρημαρχίαν (see Lampros, Hermes, X. 269). — λῦσεσθαι Steph.; λύσασθαι X.

27. σύμμεικτα: Meisterhans,§ p. 188; σύμμεικτα X. — ΑΠΟΓΡΑΦΗ ΧΑΛΚΩΜΑΤΩΝ wanting in X.

29. οὕσιας Cont.; αἰτίας X. — δις χρηστήσαι Rs.; διαχρησθήσαυ X. — οἴεσθε Rs.; οἴεσθαι X.

30. ἦς λόγου ἐχον C; ἦςιολόγον ἐχον X. — ἦ add. Tayl.

32. μὴδὲν West.; μὴ X. — ἐνοφείλεσθαι Bekk.; ὑφείλεσθαι X. — τὰς add. West.

34. ἄνδρες add. F. — ἥξιοῦτε ἄν C; ἥξιον X. — τοὺς κηδεστάς τοὺς ἐκείνου Sluiter, Rn.-F.; τοὺς . . . ἐκείνου (lacuna of four letters) X; ἐκείνου Th.

36. ὀμοίως Rs.; ὀμοῖος X. — σὰ Cob.; ἵσα X.

37. διένεμεν X; διένεμεν Steph., Fr., F., Th. The supposition is particular, i.e. that of a single action of an indefinite subject (τις), with the potential aorist in the apodosis.

38. δημεύσατε Rs.; δημεύσετε X. — ἀγαθὸν X; κακὸν Sauppe, who holds that the suggestion that the confiscation of the property of Timo-theus might be justified by the prospect of a great gain to the city, is strange and especially ill-fitted to the character of the speaker. But the “good” (ἀγαθὸν) to the city in the supposed case would be, not the gain of so many talents of property, but the “good” sought in every righteous confiscation, the protection of the city by the punishment of crime.—δὲ C; ἕαν X; δ’ el Rn., Th.—λαβοῖτ’ ἦ ἃ X, corrected by the first hand from λάβοι τὴν; λαβοῖτ’ ἦ Steph., Th.—τοῦτο:

40. γίγνεται Rs.; τί γίγνεται X.

42. φήθη ἐν Steph.; ἢθησαν X.—οἰκίαν Markl.; οὐσίαν X.—

43. ἐπὶ Σικελίας Hertlein; ἐν Σικελίᾳ X.—νάσις Tayl.; μνᾶς X.
44. αἰτιάσασθει Dobr.; αἰτιᾶσθε X.—ἐπεῖ Rs.; ἐπὶ X.—πλεῖν:

45. μὲν οὖν Markl.; μὲν X.—οἱ Tayl.; καὶ X.
46. πλεῖν: πλεῖον X. Cp. on § 31.—ἐνεμάσθην δὲ τῷ νεῖ: ἐνεμάσθη δὲ τῷ νεῖ X. On νεῖ see Meisterhans,§ 17. 4 and § 55. 4.—ἐκάτερος Rs.; ἐκατέρω X.—πλεῖν: πλέον X. Cp. πλεῖου (X) above.—τάλαντα Rs.; ταλάντων X.
47. ἐνδον Sch.; ἐνδον ἰὴν X.—καταλείπειν Kayser; καταλιπεῖν X.
48. I have followed Th. in inserting this paragraph after § 47. The instance of the mistaken assumption as to the property of Alcibiades is fitting as one of the series introduced by οἱ ζώντες μὲν πλούστειν ἐδώkον (§ 45), and closed with the comment φαυνόμεθα οὖν κτλ. (§ 49); the point in all of these cases is that after the death of the man, his property was found to be far below popular expectation, or wasted away rapidly in the hands of his heirs. With the close of § 49 a new and more surprising instance of misconception is introduced,—that concerning the property of a living man, who himself proved its falsity.
From this the speaker draws the telling inference that it is dangerous to act under such rumors. This is followed in the most logical manner by § 53. The insertion here of the instance of Alcibiades would betray not merely looseness of structure, but inability to remember the point of the argument. Cp. Westermann, Quaestionum Lysiaca-rum, II. 17 ff. The position of the paragraph in the Mss. would give a strong presumption against its genuineness were not the text of the whole speech in so poor condition.—πλεῖν: πλέον X.
48. πλείστα Baiter and Sauppe; ὁς πλείστα X. — φασὶ Cont.; φησὶ X. — τὰ αὐτὸι Sch.; αὐτοὶ X. τὸ δὲ τοῦτον νῦν West.; τὸ, τε τοῦτον τοῖνν X.— κατέληπεν ᾦν Rn.; κατέληπεν X.

49. οὖν add. Rs. — ἐψευσμένοι: ἐψηφισμένοι X. — τεθνεώτων Markl.; τεθνεώτως X. — ἐξελεγχθεῖν: ἐξενεκθεῖν X.

50. ταλάντοις Francken; τάλαντα X, Th.— ἡ add. C; ὅσων Rs. — ἀπογράφοντος Rs.; ἀπογράφεστος X.

51. ἀπάντων Rs.; ἀπόνων X.— ἔσαθε C; εἰ ἔσαθε X.— πρὶν Steph.; πλὴν X.— ἐλθότας Steph.; ἐλθότες X.— καὶ ἡδὴ Dobr.; καὶ ἤδια X.— γέ τινας Markl.; τέ τινας X.— ἀπολέσθαι οἱ ῥαδίως Kayser; ῥαδίως ἀπ. οἱ X.

54. μᾶλλον ἡ; ἡ μᾶλλον X.— ἀπολέσθαι Rs.; ἀπολέσθαι X.

55. καὶ ὁ τρόπῳ . . . προσεδανεισάτο: Th. follows West. (Quaest. Lys. II. 20) in treating this recapitulation as interpolated. But West.'s argument from its incompleteness is not conclusive. The speaker recapitulates the two great facts upon which he bases his argument; all that has followed the testimony to the impoverishment of Aristophanes by his Cyprian expedition has been to show the reasonableness of that testimony and the danger of rejecting it because of a different preconception. — οὔτε τῷ Rs.; οἴδε τῷ X.— οὔτε πρὸς . . . οὔτε πρὸς C, Rs.; οἴδε πρὸς . . . οἴδε πρὸς X.

57. μόνου τοῦτον ἑνεκα ἵνα Hertlein; οὐ μόνον τούτου ἑνεκεν, ἀλλ' ἵνα X. Th. suggests οὐδὲν ἀλλὸν ἑνεκα ἀλλ' ἵνα.— ἀναγνώσται: ἀναγνώστησε X′. — ΔΗΠΥΡΥΣΙΑΙ C; om. X.

58. καὶ τοῖς Sluiter; αὐτοῖς X.— δοκούντα Markl.; δοκούντας X.

59. παρέσχεν F.; παρέσχεν X, Th.— ἐσεσθαι: ἐσεσθαι X.

60. μὲν χρόνον Ald.; μὲν οὖν χρόνον X.— λάθος: λάθη X.

61. ὅν ὡμεῖς Rs.; ὅ νῦν εἰς X.— δημεύσατ' C; δημεύσηθ' X.

62. ὥσπερ καὶ Sch.; ὥσπερ εἰ X.— τῷ τ' ἐργῳ τῇ πάλαι ταῦτ' ἐσται I have written for τῷ τ' ἐργῳ πάλαι ταῦτ' ἐστι X; ὥστε τῷ γ' ἐργῳ πάλαι τῆς πάλαις ταυτ' ἐστὶ Th.— οὔτε ἐγὼ X; οὐκ ἐγὼ Th.— ὑμῖν τε Steph.; ὑμῖν δὲ X, Th.

63. ἀθληταῖς Tayl.; ἀθλητάς X.

1. ποιουμένους τοὺς λόγους Hirschig; ποιουμένους λόγους X; λόγους ποιουμένους Frb., Th.

2. ὥσ ἀκρίτους: ὥσ ἀκρίτως X.— γνώσεσθαι: γνώσεσθε X.
3. σωτηρίας ἕνεκα: σωτηρίας οὖνεκα X; cp. on 32. 10.
4. δεδιώς τὰς αἰτίας: αἰσχρὸν δ’ ἡγούμαι Dobr.; δεδιῶς δὲ τὰς αἰτίας αἰσχρὸν ἡγούμαι X.
5. ἀνάβητη. ἐπὶ Frb.; ἀναβηθῆ οἱ ἐπὶ X. — ἦ δέξιος Rs.; δέξιος ἦ X.
7. χρήν Rs.; χρὴ X. — διὰ μακροτέρων P. Müller; καὶ μακρότερον X.
8. τέτταρες Bergk; δύο X; νῦν Th. δύο of X is probably from a misunderstanding of δ’ = τέτταρες. — φιλονικῶσιν: φιλονικῶσιν X.
9. παρέξομαι. ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ. καὶ ὡς οὖντος . . . φαίνονται. ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ. X has a lacuna after παρέξομαι with space for about eight letters, and it has μα in the margin. Elsewhere Lysias always introduces his testimony immediately after παρέξομαι (F. ad loc.). With the reading that I propose the speaker calls Anytus to testify to what his advice really was; he then produces other testimony, probably copies of official records, to show that Anytus's term of office fell the year before. With καὶ ὡς οὖντος . . . ἐπιε the governing verb is readily understood from the context. Th. transposes ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ from the position after φαίνονται (ΜΑΡΤΥΡΙΑ vulg.) to the lacuna after παρέξομαι, and reads καὶ οὖντος . . . (after Pluygers). — δὲ τίττες Emperius; δ’ ἐπίτηθες X.
10. ἀπολογήσεσθαι: ἀπολογήσασθαι X.
11. ἄλλα γὰρ Rs.; ἄλλα μὲν γὰρ X. — τοῦτον τὸν λόγον . . . οὗ τρέφεσθαι Cob.; . . . ἐλεύσεσθαι X; τοῦτο τῷ λόγῳ . . . ἐλεύσεσθαι Wdn., Th. — ὕμων C; ὕμων X, and Suid. s.v. ἄξιον, Th.; cp. ὕμων ἕνεκα § 12.
12. ὕμων X; ὕμων Th. — ἕνεκα: οὖνεκα X. — νῦν Hofmeister; νυνι X.
14. αὐτοί Markl.; οὕτωι X. — κεκλήθησαι: κεκλείθησαι X.
15. τοῖς αὐτοῖς καίροῖς . . . ἐν οἴσπερ Cob.; τοῖς τοῖς καίροῖς . . . ἐν οἴσπερ X; τοῖς καίροῖς . . . δοσπερ Th. — ὕμων X; ὕμων Bekk., Th., because of τυγχάνητε following. But τυγχάνητε is itself joined with διαφερώμεθα and ἀγαπῶμεν.
19. τούτων Kayser; αὐτῶν X.
20. αὐτοῦνται Tayl.; αὐτοῦνται X. — παύσασθαι Vulg. before Sch.
παύσασθαι Χ; παύσασθαι Sch., Th.; cp. § 8. Lysias repeatedly uses παύσασθαι, never παύσεσθαι.

21. ἐφ’ οὔς Tayl.; ἐφ’ οἷς X. — παρὰ τούτων Tayl.; παρ’ αὐτῶν X. — τίν’ αὐτῶς C; τὴν αὐτὴν X. — εἰσπλέουσιν Rs.; ἐκπλέουσιν X.

22. ὁτου Sauppe; οὔτε X.

XXIV

The superscription in X is ΠΡΟΞ ΤΗΝ ΕΙΣΑΓΓΕΛΙΑΝ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΜΗ ΔΙΔΟΣΘΑΙ ΤΩΙ ΑΔΥΝΑΤΩΙ ΑΡΤΥΡΙΩΝ. But it is clear from § 26, compared with Arist. Resp. Ath. 49. 4, that this is not a case of εἰσαγγελία. See Introd. p. 232.

1. οὖ πολλοῦ Markl., cp. Xen. Anab. 5. 4. 32; ολλοῦ X.—γὰρ add. Rs.—εἴ τὸς X; ἐκ τῇ Dobr. See commentary.—ἄξιον X; ἄξιος or ἄξια Rs.; ἄξιον ἄντι F. The force of βεβιωκότα so nearly approaches that of γεγονότα that the pred. adj. seems possible; yet no other instance is cited, and βεβιωκός with adv. is very common. Lysias uses it even in 14. 41, where the parallelism of cola would tempt to the use of the adjective: ἀλλως δὲ κόσμοι εἰσὶ καὶ σωφρόνως βεβιωκασιν.

3. ἰᾶσθαι· καλὸς: ἰᾶσθαι καλὸς X; ἰᾶσθαι, εἰκότως P. Müller, Th. καλὸς is precisely fitted to the sportive tone.

5. τὴν μὲν οὖν: τῆς μὲν οὖν X. — εὐπορίαν καὶ τὸν ἄλλον: εὐπορίας καὶ τῶν ἄλλων X.

6. ἦν ἄν Cont.; ἦς ἄν X.

7. τοὺς καὶ Rs.; καὶ τοὺς X.

8. ἐπόμενα C; ἐξόμενα X.

10. ἐγὼ γάρ; . . . τοῦτ’ οἴμαι Wdn.; ἐγὼ γάρ; . . . τοιοῦτο X; εἰκὸς γάρ; . . . τοιοῦτο Kayser, Th.

11. ἀναβαίνω: after ἀναβαίνω X adds ἐρίδιον ἐστὶ μαθεῖν, omitted by most editors after Sch.

12. τοῦτον ἄν αὐτῶν Kayser; τοῦτον αὐτῶν X; τοῦτον ἄν (omitting αὐτῶν) Wdn., Th. — εἰμι Kayser; εἰμὶ X.
13. thesmobétai add Frb.

15. légei C; légo X. — ónomásaie Rn.; ónomásaí X. — πραόνως, taúta Kayser; πραόν ὡς μηδε ψευδηται taúta X; πραόνως ψευδηται, πιστὰ ποιήσων Wdn.

16. τοὺς πενομένους Rs.; πενομένους X.

17. προεβυτέροι Frb.; étéros X.

18. oûs ãn: oûs èan X. — ὑπάρξαντας Steph.; συνάρξαντας X.

19. ó δὲ (after μυροπώλιου): òi òi X.— òποι ãn τύχη: òπη ãn τύχοι X. — τοὺς ἐγγυτάτω Steph.; ἐγγυτάτω X. — τοὺς πλείστον Steph.; οὐ πλ. X. — ἀμοιγέτου Mor. (Kühn. i. i. 614); ἄλλου γέ τον X.

20. περὶ τῶν φαύλων ὀμοίως τούτῳ Dobr., Rn.-F., Th.; π. τ. ὀμοίως τούτῳ φαύλου X, Fr., Blass (Alt. Bered. I. 639). The Ms. reading gives a fine, keen thrust, quite in keeping with the tone of the speech, but it breaks the connection of the γάρ clause with the preceding, πρὸς íν ἔκαστον . . . τῶν εἰρημένων.

21. καὶ μῆ: μῆδ' X; μῆ οὖν F.; μῆ τοίνυν Wdn.; μῆ δὴ Herw.; μῆ Th. F. suggests that μῆδ' is right and that the necessary preceding negative clause has dropped out. I propose καὶ as giving the close connection needed with the preceding; this is not an inference (οὖν, τοίνυ) from that, but a continuation of it.—μόνου Markl.; μόνον X. — ἀρχῶν X, Rn.-F.; del. Frb., Th. ἀρχῶν fits the reference in §13 and καλλιάτων of §23; its erasure destroys a fine bit of humor.

23. δικαιότατος Markl.; δικαιότατος X. — θήσθε Bekk.; θέσθε X. — τὴν ψήφον Cont.; τῇ ψῆφῳ X.

24. βίον: Francken; βίον πρὸς τὰ τοιαύτα X.

25. ἀλλ' οὖδ' C; οὖδ' X. — Xαλκίδα Frb.; X adds τὴν ἐπ' Εὐρίπῳ. — ἀποδημῶν Reuss; ἀπάντων X, F.; ἀπελθῶν Bäker, Th.; ἀπάντων of X, an exaggeration at best, is strangely put in so emphatic a position.

26. ὀμοίων Cont.; ὀμοίως X.

On the title see Introd. p. 253.

i. καὶ σαφῶς Dobr.; οἱ σαφῶς X; ei σαφῶς Rs., Th. — μηδὲν Rs.; μὲν X.—κερδαίνειν ἦ X, Rn.-F.; omit Dobr., Th., Fr.-Geb. He is speaking of sycophants, who meddle with things that do not concern them, hoping to be bought off (κερδαίνειν) by the men whom they threaten, or else (ἡ) to carry the case against them through the courts (πείθειν). Francken proposes κερδαίνειν ὑμᾶς πείθοντες, and Reuss κέρδους ἕνεκα; but the gain of the sycophant comes not by his persuading the court, but by being bought off from the attempt.

2. ὁσα Herw.; αὐτῷ X.; ἀπανθὴ' α' Bartelt, Rn.-F.; Th. (after Rs.) retains α and inserts πάντα before ἐμοῦ.— γεγένηται Dobr.; γεγένηται X.— ἀποδείξει Steph.; ἀποδείξει X.— ἀπαντᾷ Steph.; ἀπαντᾷς X.— ὁ βέλτιστος Rs.; βέλτιστος X.

3. καθιστάναι: καθιστάνειν X.— χρηματίζοιντο Coraes.; χρηματίζειν τὸ X.

4. ἀποφήνω Van den Es; ἀποφανῷ X.

5. μοι add. Frb.

7. οὐς add. Cont.

8. καθιστάναι F.; καθιστάναι X.

9. τῶν πολιτείων Rs.; πολιτείων X.— αὐτὸς Brulart; αὐτῶς X.— ἐπολιόρκουν τοὺς μεθ' Sch.; ἐπολιόρκουντο μεθ' X.

10. εἴ τις: X has ἢτις with εἴ written above.— ὁ τὴν κρίσιν Rn.; κρίσιν X.

11. ἢσαν Francken; ἢσαν εἰθύναις δεδωκότες X, Fr.-Geb. εἰθύναις δεδωκότες gives an unnecessary limitation to the class of ἄτιμοι, and breaks the symmetry of the three parallel cola, thrusting δεδωκότες into apparent coördination with ἀπεστερημένοι and κεχρημένοι. The origin of the words as a gloss is easy to conjecture.— ὑμῶν Steph.; ὑμῶν X.— τὰς περὶ τούτων Auger; τὰς τούτων X.— ἀποδέχεσθαι Tayl.; ἐποδέχεσθαι X.

12. τετραπάρχηκα Sch.; ἑτεραπάρχηκα X.— μὲν γὰρ X; τε γὰρ Geb., Th.— τετράκις δὲ: I have written δὲ for καὶ of X (Th.). This makes the five trierarchies, four of which included naval battles, the first of the forms of liturgy, the εἰσφορά, the second form. It avoids treating νεοναυμάχηκα as a form of liturgy, as is done with the reading τε. Weidner's substitution of εἰσφοράς δ' for καὶ εἰσφοράς accomplishes the same thing, but less clearly.

13. προστατομένων ἐδαπανώμην Steph.; πραττομένων ἐδαπανώμεν X.— ἀλλὰ Emperius; ἀλλὰ καὶ X.

14. οὔτε τῶν Markl.; οὔτε ἐπὶ τῶν X.— οἱ τριάκοντα Markl.; οίδε X.

15. χρήσασθαι Frb.; χρῆσθαι X.

16. οὐδὲ δίαιταν: οὔτε δίαιταν X.— ὁργίζεσθε Ald.; ὁργίζουσθε X.
18. ἐχθροὺς C; ἐκ τοῦ X. — ἐκβαλόντας: ἐκβάλλοντας X. — ὑπολειφθήσεται Dobr.; ἀπολειφθήσεται X.
19. ὅτε (before ὑπέρ) Geb.; ὅτι X.
20. ἤγείρθαι C; ἤγείρθη X. — ἦμων Francken; ἄντων X.
21. κακὸν C; ἀγαθὸν X.
22. πυθάνοοσθέ X; ἐπιπθάνοοσθέ Francken, Th. With the opt. the following μὴ ἔχοντας is regular; with the indic. it would be very exceptional. — ἐκ τοῦ ἀστεως X has after στασάζοντας; F. placed before ἐκκεκηρυγμένους. — πλείους δὲ Cont.; πλείους X. — ταύτα Th.; ταύτα X.
23. τούτων χαλεπώτερον Geb.; χαλ. τούτων X; see commentary.
24. δἐξαντ' δὲξαι τ' X.
25. μυσθάναι καὶ: καὶ add. Baiter. — Ἐπιγένην καὶ Δημοφάνην καὶ Κλεισθένην X. Beloch (All. Politik, p. 78, Anm. 1) restores Ἐπιγένην in Arist. Eccl. 167 for Ἐπιγένον of the Mss. Schwartz (Rhein. Museum 44, 121 Anm. 1), followed by Busolt (Griech. Gesch. III. ii. 1542 Anm. 1), writes Δημοφάντον and Κλεισθένη, probably correctly. Both men were active at the time mentioned. In 410 Demophonates moved the decree of Andoc. 1. 96 ff. Cligenes was clerk of the Senate in the first prytany of 410/9 (C.I.A. I, 188, Andoc. 1. 96); he is reviled by Aristophanes (Frogs, 707 ff.) as ὀ πίθηκος and ὀ μικρός (cp. v. 1085).
27. ὡστε τοῦς: ὡστε add. C.
31. ὁμοι Rs.; ὁμοίως X.
32. δέξαντ’ δὲξαι τ’ X.
33. τοὺς ἐκ Πειραιῶς κινδύνους X; τοὺς τῶν ἐκ Πει. κινδύνους Sauppe. Sch. would drop κινδύνους or read κινδυνεύσαντας; ἀκυνδύνως P. Müller. 34. 2 has τῶν ἐκ ἀστεως (πραγμάτων), an expression parallel with τοὺς ἐκ Πειραιῶς κινδύνους. The expressions ἐκ Πειραιῶς and ἐξ ἀστεως were becoming fixed formulas. Against the insertion of τῶν or its equivalent (making the prosecutors enjoy freedom to act as they will because of the dangers of other men) is the mention of the safety that may afterward come through others; this implies that the former safety came through them (τούτων). — δι' ἑτέρους Tayl.; δι' ἑτέρου X. — σωτήρια Frb.; σωτηρία X. — πεπαύσεσθαι Geb.; ἐπιλυσασθαι X. — ὁ τοιοῦτοι πάντες: I have written this for τὸ αὐτὸ πάντες of X. Th. retains τὸ αὐτὸ πάντες, translating alle wie ein Mann. τῷ αὐτῷ πάντες
For the text of speeches XXXII, XXXIII (the Olympic speech), and XXXIV we depend upon the Mss. of Dionysius Περί τῶν ἀρχαίων ῥητόρων. For a summary description of the Mss. and for bibliography see the preface of the text edition of Usener-Radermacher, Dionysii Halicarnasei Opuscula, Vol. I, Leipzig, 1899.

The Mss. are of the following families:

I. Mss. of a collection of selected works of Dionysius, Philostratus, Callistratus, Aristides.

II. Mss. of a collection of rhetorical works of Dionysius with a Compendium of Rhetoric by Josephus Rhacendytes.

III. Mss. of a collection of speeches and declamations by various orators and sophists, in which is included the treatise of Dionysius on Lysias. This text has been emended by an editor who has often made corrections according to his own judgment, not on authority of other Mss.; but the source of the text of the treatise on Lysias seems to have been a good Ms. of Family I.

In addition we have for §§ 1–3 as far as χείρονς εἶναι, and § 4 as far as θυγατέρα, independent testimony in a citation by Syrianus, which has been transmitted also in the anonymous treatise Walz. VII. 1084, and in Maximus Planudes, Walz. V. 546.

In the following notes only the more important variant readings are recorded. Note is made wherever the text adopted differs from that of Thalheim or that of Usener-Radermacher. Mss. are cited as follows (see Usener-Radermacher, p. 2, Thalheim, p. vii.):

I. F Florentinus, bybl. Laurent. LIX. 15.
II. M Ambrosianus, D. 119, sup.
   P Vaticanus Palatinus gr. 58.
   B Parisinus, bybl. nat. gr. 1742.
III. C Parisinus, bybl. nat. gr. 1800.
   G Guelferbytanus n. 806.
   T Parisinus bybl. nat. 2944.

3. μὴν δὲ Syr.; οὐδέν MSS., Us.R.

4. ο άνδρες δικασταί MSS.; ο δικασταί Syr.—νεὶ δύο Morgan (cp. on 12. 34); νοὶ δύο F, M, Us.R.; νοὶ νοὶ G, T.

5. τῶν ὀπλιτῶν: τοῦ ἐπὶ τῶν ὀπλιτῶν G, T.—ἀδελφόν Herw.; ἀδελφὸν ὀμοπτροί MSS., probably from § 4.—ἀναγκαῖοτητας: ἀνάγκασις T.—δικαιῷ περὶ τοῦ αὐτοῦ παιδᾶς Sauppe; καὶ ὥσπερ τοῦ αὐτοῦ παιδᾶς F, M, P, B; ἐτέρῳ εἰς τοὺς αὐτοῦ παιδᾶς ἐπιτρόπῳ G.

6. ναυτικά Markl.; αὐτικά MSS.—μνᾶς...: Sauppe pointed out the loss of an item in the reckoning;— δὲ (after κατέλυτε) add. Rs.

7. άνδρός...: Fuhr pointed out the lacuna, which is seen in the absence of a correlative to τὴν μὲν θυγατέρα. Wilamowitz (Hermes, 36. 536) would, instead of assuming the lacuna, read τέως μὲν τὴν θυγατέρα. Without lacuna Us.R.

8. ἐπείδη Fuhr; ἐπεῖ MSS.; cp. §§ 2 and 25. See 12. 11 Crit. N.—χρόνῳ F, M; cp. 1. 8, 13. 83; τῷ χρόνῳ G, T; cp. 1. 20.—ἐπιεικόνων Rs.; ἐπιεικόνων (-λιπ- G) MSS.

9. καταλίπου Steph.; καταλείποι MSS., Us.R.—διεφερεν: διεφερε Ald.; διεφερον MSS.

12. πραγμάτων MSS., Us.R. (cp. τὰ τούτων πράγματα, § 2); χρημάτων Th. and most editors, after Halbertsma.

13. ἡδέω Ρ. (cp. Kühn. I. ii. p. 408); θέλω MSS. Us.R.—οῦτος λέγη F, M; αὐτός λέγης G, T.—καταβαλείν: καταλιπείν MSS.; ἐκλι-πείν Sch.; λιπείν Dobr.; ἀπολπείν West.; καταβιοῦν Fuhr; καταναλίσκειν Us.R.; καταλίεω Th. The Ms. reading and the conjectures cited all rest upon the assumption that τὸν βίον is the mother's life; but her life is not involved in perjury over her children's heads more than in any perjury. The point of the argument is that the mother is willing to stake her children upon the truth of her oath; τὸν βίον is then the life of the children, which will be the penalty if her oath is false. I have therefore written καταβαλεῖν, the precise word for the payment of a price or penalty.

14. αὐτῇ F², M; αὐτῇ F¹; αὐτὸν G, Th. — ναυτικὰ Markl.; αὐτίκα Mss.— ἐξοικίσει Cob.; διοικήσει Mss.; διοικίσει Matthaei, Th, Us.R. So ἐξοικίζετο Cob.; διοικίζετο Mss., Th., Us.R. The analogy of forms like διαπερᾶν, διαπλεῖν, etc., cited by Th. to justify διοικίζει in the sense of 'removed' is not valid in view of the familiar and otherwise universal use of διοικίζειν = to scatter a people in different settlements. See Cobet, Var. Lect. p. 68. — βιβλίῳ F, M, B, Us.R. (βυβλίῳ F, B); τῷ βιβλίῳ G, Th.; τῷ βιβλίῳ T. — αὐτὴν Rs.; ταυτὴν Mss.

15. ἐγγείω Naber; ἐγγείους F, M, P, B; ἐγγύους G, T.

16. ἐκβάλλειν F, P, B, M¹; ἐκβαλεῖν T. The present infinitive is exactly fitted to the picturesque description of how he proposes to 'send them packing.' — ἢγιώκας Mss.; ἢγίωσας Pluygers, Th. — ὁ πατὴρ T; πατήρ F, M, P, B.

17. ἀτίμος F, M; ἀτίμως G, T.— προδομὴ ... φοβῇ ... αἰσχύνη ... ποιῇ Herw. Cp. Kühn. I. ii. p. 60. προδομῆ ... φοβῇ Mss.; αἰσχύνη Mss. except F, which had αἰσχύνην, corrected by F¹; ποιεῖς F, M, P, B; ποιῇ G, T. Th. and Us.R. have -ει in all but αἰσχύνη.

18. μὴ ἤπτον F, M, P, B; μηδὲν ἤπτον G, T, Wdn. The emphatic form is more common; the simple negative with ἤπτον appears in Lysias only here and in § 21.

19. πρὸς ἀλλήλους: M, P, B, Th., Us.R.; εἰς ἀλλήλους F; om. G, T. The only other instance in Lysias of ὑποψία with prep. is 25. 30, where πρὸς may be due to the connection with ῥμονοῖς. In other prose writers εἰς is used with ὑποψία oftener than πρὸς. εἰς Thuc. 4. 27. 2. 6. 61. 4. 6. 103. 4; only once with πρός, 2. 37. The two instances in Andocides (1. 51, 1. 68) have εἰς. Antiphon always uses εἰς, but with a word of motion: Π. β 3, 6, Π. γ 2, 10. The only instance of either in Demosthenes is 23. 103 ἡ γὰρ ἐκείνον πρὸς ἀλλήλους ταραξάκατα ὑποψία, where πρὸς may be due to ταραξάκατα. [Dem.] 48. 18 has τῆς ὑποψίας τῆς πρὸς τὸν οἰκετήν. Demosthenes has κατὰ in 29. 24.
Isocrates has ὑποψιῶν περὶ αὐτοῦ λαβεῖν 15. 123. In favor of πρός in our passage is Lysias’s usage with words of hostile attitude. A full statement of his use of prepositions with words denoting hostility is the following:
